MEMORIES OF HISTORIC BEGINNING OF STATE ARE REVIVED AT MOVING CEREMONY

By MARCIA KRETZMER

TEL AVIV —

Thirty years almost to the hour since the establishment of the Jewish state was proclaimed by David Ben-Gurion, the surviving members of the Peoples' Council met once again in Tel Aviv's Museum, formerly Meir Dizengoff's house on Boulevard Rothschild, to relive the historic signing of the proclamation of independence.

The recording of Ben-Gurion's voice, controlled but vibrating with emotion, rang out in an enactment of the ceremony by which Israel took her place as a sovereign state among the nations.

The tense silence was twice punctuated by prolonged applause when Ben-Gurion declared the establishment of Israel and when he announced the formal abolition of the White Paper regulations.

The occasion was a central event in the 30th anniversary independence celebrations, and the reopening of Independence Hall, reconstituted as it was on May 14, 1948, as a permanent museum.

Except for the fact that this time PM Menachem Begin was in David Ben-Gurion's place under the huge portrait of Theodor Herzl, flanked by the national flag with President Ephraim Katzir on his right, it all looked uncannily as it did in the famous photographs — down to the chairs, carpets, pictures and even the gavels used in the original ceremony.

Among the 300 persons present were Speaker of the Knesset Yitzhak Shamir, Chief Rabbi Shlomo Goren, World Zionist Organization Chairman Arye Dulzin, Mayor of Tel Aviv Shlomo Lahat, and members of the government and Opposition, including former premier Yitzhak Rabin. On the dais in their original places were Ze'ev Sharett, the man charged with the original Independence Day arrangements and later minister himself, and Mordechai Ben-Tov, the one surviving member of the provisional government.

Two Canadians, Clara Balinsky, national president of Canadian Hadassah-WIZO, and journalist Charles Lazarus were, in large part, responsible for the idea of honoring the original signatories of the document and restoring Independence Hall as a national shrine.

Canadian Hadassah-WIZO donated IL 2.5 million, half the sum necessary to bring the idea to fruition. The remaining half was furnished by the Tel Aviv municipality.

The finished Independence Hall will house a permanent exhibition of documents relating to the proclamation, including protocol, stamps, resolutions, and the first directives of the provisional government, a radiant Mrs. Balinsky told The CJN as she took her place before the ceremony.

"It's the greatest moment of my life to relive this tremendously historical moment," she said. Raya Jaglom, president of World WIZO, leaned forward from the row behind Mrs. Balinsky and said to her, "you deserve 10 medals for this."

Mrs. Balinsky put her signature to a parchment scroll commemorating the opening of Independence Hall which was also signed by Premier Begin, President Katzir and Mayor Lahat and by 12 of the surviving signatories, including former minister of tourism, Moshe Kol, and the leader of Rakah, Meir Wilner. Former PM Golda Meir, who signed in 1948 as Golda Meyerson, was not present at the ceremony, though Rachel Kagan-Cohen, now 90 years old, was.

Begin, his voice hoarse from many Independence Day speeches, paid tribute to the part played by the fighters of the Haganah and underground organizations in expelling foreign rule. Comparing this strength of Israel in 1948 to today, the premier said: "The love of Erez Israel will give us faith to triumph over our difficulties the way we did when the state was established."

Ben-Tov surprised guests by an unscheduled five-minute speech in which he charged: "We have built many great and wonderful things in the past 30 years — but we forgot to build the people."

Referring to his recently-deceased colleague Pinchas Rosen, Israel's first minister of justice, he said: "One would never have imagined in one's worst dream that a minister of justice in this country would have had to deal with organized crime, extortion and rape.

"These things never had to happen. It is possible to be a great people in a smaller country as well as a lesser people in a large country," he reminded his listeners.

The ceremony concluded, as in the original, with a massive rendering of Hatikva played by members of the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra.

Bell reverses stand

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

TORONTO —

Bell Canada has reversed itself and allowed the Canadian Human Rights Commission to examine documents pertaining to a recent $1.1 billion deal with Saudi Arabia that has been called discriminatory.

Gordon Fairweather, the federal human rights commissioner, had said that Bell had refused to hand over documents relating to the contract whereby Bell Canada International, a subsidiary of Bell Canada, would advise and train the Saudis to operate and maintain a modern telephone system.

MP Herb Gray (Windsor West) requested the commission probe the transaction after discovering that the visa application provided to Bell by the Saudi consulate in Ottawa "specifically asks for the religion of the applicant."

Prior to agreeing to comply with Fairweather's request, Bell had argued that the $1.1 billion contract — the largest in its history — should be kept confidential.

Bell officials had balked at turning over the documents in question, citing Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau's remark that the contract contained no clause barring Jewish workers from going to Saudi Arabia.

A Bell spokesman told The Canadian Jewish News in an interview this week that his company had never refused to co-operate with the Canadian Human Rights Commission. "Our legal people wanted to know which documents the commission sought," he explained. "We wanted details about the allegations."

The official reiterated the contention that Bell has committed no wrong-doing or broken laws in fulfilling the Saudi contract. "We believe we are complying with all the requirements of the law," he observed from his Montreal office.

"We are confident that the commission examination will show that we're acting properly," he added.

Meanwhile, a Canadian Human Rights Commission spokesman said that a report on the controversy is not likely for at least a few weeks. "We're still looking to see if there are any grounds that Bell discriminated against its employees," she said from Ottawa.

She noted that Bell had probably decided to give the commission the documents for fear of further tarnishing its public image.

There have been no new developments to date concerning Bell's internal document which states that Bell employees must "obtain proof of religion in the form of a baptismal or other certificate" in order to work in Saudi Arabia.

The commission recently agreed to determine whether that document contravenes the Canadian Human Rights Act. Dated Aug. 11, 1977, it refers to an earlier deal between Bell Canada International and the Saudi-owned Arab America Oil Company, Aramco, under which 25 Bell employees were sent to Saudi Arabia to work on improving the private telephone system operated by Aramco.

Nine million visit Israel

JERUSALEM [JTA] —

Nearly nine million tourists have visited Israel since the establishment of the state, the Central Bureau for Statistics has reported. Of these, close to seven million came since the Six Day War, of which approximately 3.4 million came since 1975. This compares to only 325,000 visits which took place between 1948-1958.

Trudeau's address in praise of Israel draws big ovation

By JANICE ARNOLD and MEL SOLMAN

MONTREAL —

Over 17,000 people turned out to celebrate Israel's 30th anniversary at the Forum, in what co-ordinators of the event describe as the largest single gathering of Jews ever in Canada.

A sold-out event — resulting in 1,500 standing room tickets and thousands of people turned away — the four-hour spectacle, "One Score and Ten", attracted a retinue of major political figures including Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

The list of dignitaries present read like a Who's Who in Canadian political life. Among the members of the federal cabinet seated in the audience were: Marc Lalonde, minister for federal-provincial relations; Jeanne Sauve, communications; Jean-Pierre Goyer, supply and services; Monique Begin, health and welfare and Warren Allmand, consumer and corporate affairs.

From the Quebec National Assembly were Gerald Godin, PQ member for Mercier, and Yves Michaud, special consultant to the government on international affairs.

Jean-Roch Boivin, chef de cabinet of Premier Rene Levesque, who attended the reception for invited guests held beforehand by the Israeli Consulate, denied a report in a French-language daily that Levesque had failed to attend because of the nature of his invitation. The reason the premier did not attend, Boivin told The Canadian Jewish News, was because of a scheduled cabinet meeting.

The report had indicated that Levesque had been offended by the fact that his invitation was sent out much later than the one to Trudeau.

J.A. Lyone Heppner, general chairman of the year-long Montreal Yom Ha'atzmaut festivities, explained that both Trudeau and Mrs. Begin received invitations far in advance because it had been hoped both would come to "One Score and Ten" as participants. Levesque and Mayor Jean Drapeau's invitations were mailed 12 days later when it seemed likely Trudeau would speak at the forum. Drapeau accepted his invitation.

A surprise guest was Quebec provincial Liberal Leader Claude Ryan who received enthusiastic applause from the audience. Also from his party were MNAs Dr. Victor Goldbloom, Harry Blank and John Ciaccia.

Trudeau's address, which was delivered mid-way through the show, sparked a standing ovation. The clapping continued throughout his speech which praised the Jews for their contribution to mankind both in religion and knowledge, and the accomplishments of Israel in building a nation.

"The Jews who gathered in the Holy Land to form the state of Israel brought to it all the wealth of spirit and intelligence, all the qualities, virtues and gifts that I have mentioned. In a few decades, their presence, the legitimacy of which cannot rightfully be questioned, has literally brought back to life a land that was being eaten away the desert . . . A new democracy has been set up. . . . Two official languages have been established, Hebrew and Arabic.

"In just a few decades an original and marvellously lively culture has grown up — in brief, Israel has constructed one of the most advanced societies in the world."

Trudeau said the situation which Israel finds itself in is basically the same as that of the ancient Hebrews.

"It is a situation made up of very complex and shifting forces including neighbors strong in their own legitimacy.

Like its distant forefathers, Israel is forced to take into account both this complex situation and these legitimate claims, painful though this may be after so many trials and so much suffering.

"This means that in Israel the desire to obtain peace, and the will to exist, tend to form a single objective. And that is why we should attach much importance to increasing the exchanges between Israel and the Arab countries."

The very survival of the Jewish people is a "marvel", Trudeau said. "There have been dispossessions, harassments, persecutions, massacres, and deportations; they have known poverty, want, complete lack of security and dispersion in small isolated groups. They have been influenced by various foreign cultures, the power of sovereign civilizations; they have experienced the sterilizing denial of normal human contact, desperate isolation in urban and intellectual ghettos, and age-long humiliations. But nothing has destroyed their will to survive and exist as Jews."

Rabbi's lecture turns into verbal brawl

'Peace Now' backer under fire

By HARVEY WARREN

TORONTO —

A dispassionate lecture turned into a verbal brawl at Adath Israel Synagogue last week as an irate audience demanded an explanation for the speaker's support of the Peace Now movement and his criticism of the Begin government.

The speaker, Rabbi Wolfe Kelman, a former Torontonian who received his BA from the University of Toronto in 1946, is executive vice-president of the Conservative movement's Rabbinic Assembly. He was one of 36 prominent American Jews to sign a letter expressing solidarity with the Peace Now movement. The movement criticized Prime Minister Begin's response to the Sadat peace initiative, urged the Israeli government to adopt more flexible policies in the interest of peace and demanded a higher priority be given to peace than the assertion of historical rights to all of biblical Israel.

Kelman's address, mainly a tribute to Solomon Shechter, founder of the Conservative movement, was promptly forgotten as the rabbi's political actions came under fire from the first question.

"What gives you the right to represent me?" one questionner demanded, noting that Kelman's views would be seen as being representative of Conservative Jewry.

"I did not speak in anyone else's name but my own," Kelman replied, adding that another prominent Conservative rabbi condemned the 36 signatories to the Peace Now letter published in The New York Times.

Another questionner suggested the rabbi was used by the press, but Kelman, who supported former President Richard Nixon up to the five days before his resignation in disgrace, said "I don't think I was manipulated."

The small, but vocal audience of 40 persons, charged that Kelman and co-signers had put on public display a division between the leadership of the vast majority of American Jews and the Israeli government.

The statement was not harmful to Begin or Israel, Kelman asserted. Abba Eban and Yigal Allon have expressed solidarity with the movement, he said. Someone in the audience shouted they hadn't done so. Kelman insisted they had.

From the inception of the state, there have been debates on Israel foreign policy, the rabbi continued. When Begin was in opposition he criticized the Labor government.

"Not outside Israel," a detractor interjected. "Of course not," Kelman answered. "But his supporters took exception to the Israeli government."

Kelman, in a rambling explanation of his action, stressed the letter of support to the Peace Now movement omitted any organizational representation beside the name and said nothing about giving back all the territories.

Kelman dismissed the influence of the pro-Israel lobby in Washington and said American Jews don't swing elections. Rather, Israel's support is found in the Bible belt where Israel is seen as fulfilment of biblical prophecy.

"This is what makes Congress do what it does," declared Kelman, who was part of a group of leading U.S. Jews to see Anwar Sadat.

Of Begin's reception at the White House, Kelman said, he had never seen such a festive, Jewish occasion there. He noted that Carter is the first U.S. president who felt it necessary to hold a Yom Ha'atzmaut party at the White House in an effort to regain Begin's goodwill.

"The atmosphere has changed but not the substance," Kelman warned. "You can't negotiate when you're angry." The rabbi did not support Carter in the last election and believes he will be a one-term president.

In his speech, Kelman suggested Conservative Judaism gave back to Judaism the concept of religious pluralism. There is not a strong emphasis on tolerance in Jewish tradition, he noted.

Jews lost reverence for diversity within our own community, he alleged, and he laid the blame on Chassidism, which he said began as a revolutionary movement but turned into the "most repressive, reactionary movement in Jewish life."

BB, WJC form special alliance

WASHINGTON [JTA] —

B'nai B'rith and the World Jewish Congress have announced that they have entered into a "special relationship" aimed at strengthening both organizations, in promoting the interests of world Jewry.

"At no time in recent Jewish history has there been a more urgent need for communication, concerted action, and for co-operation among various bodies that act on behalf of world Jewry, in order to maximize the ability of Jews to react effectively to new dangers," David M. Blumberg, president of B'nai B'rith and Philip M. Klutznick, president of WJC, said in a joint announcement.

Blumberg said that B'nai B'rith will maintain its complete autonomy and be free to act "according to the dictates of its constituency, regardless of the degree of variance" between the two organizations.

Church attacks article

By TOBA KORENBLUM

TORONTO —

The Ontario Human Rights Commission has mediated a complaint submitted by the United Church of Canada against an allegedly anti-Arab article in the Zionist campus magazine Masada.

The charge surfaced last December when the church's representative for interfaith dialogue, Rev. James Seunarine, sent a letter of protest to the OHRC claiming an article printed in the magazine was a derogatory and prejudicial depiction of Arabs.

Similar letters of protest against the article, Chimera in the Middle East, by R. Emmett Tyrrell, Jr., an American journalist, were forwarded to University of Toronto President John Evans and Ontario Attorney-General Roy McMurtry. The Human Rights Commission interceded in the dispute and letters between the two parties resolved the differences of opinion, two weeks ago.

Masada is a non-profit student quarterly with a circulation of 55,000, primarily on Canadian campuses. According to Avram Mark Clarfield, a member of the editorial board, the controversial article was reprinted from Harpers magazine, although a credit line, for technical reasons, was not included.

A February editorial in the United Church Observer sharply rebuked Masada for its "vicious libel" and called the article "a disgrace to a civilized community concerned with dispelling racism and religious bigotry."

Clarfield described it as "slightly overwritten", but assured the Human Rights Commission that "at no time was it our intention to slander or foment racial hatred against anyone. This article was a political article, referring to some admittedly unsavory aspects of the current and tragic dispute." The article was also reprinted by the Canadian Professors for Peace in the Middle East in its bulletin last year.

The piece in question, subtitled "against a rational interpretation of Arab-Israeli relations," purports to illustrate that American statesmen are naive in trying to "ensnare" non-Western "premodern" and non-democratic Arab nations into reaching a rational resolution of the Mideast conflict. It attempts to describe the gap in cultural perceptions between the Western and Arab mind.

Tyrrell, editor-in-chief of The Alternative; An American Spectator, uses such illustrations in the course of his arguments as: "Arabs are religious fanatics devoted to a non-Western warrior religion. Their bequests to us include the words assassin and jihad. They have no democratic tradition, no tradition of contract law, and a civilization that is more decadent than Andy Warhol's."

One phrase singled out by the United Church Observer editorial was: "All in all the Arab, especially the pious Arab, makes a most unpleasant neighbor. The more addicted to the Koran the less apt he is to conform to the idealistic notions of Americans."

Rev. Seunarine said the informal complaint arose after he and Observer editor A.C. Forrest read the Tyrrell article. "I'm not carrying a brief for one side or the other," the clergyman said in an interview. "Our primary concern is that the way to mutual religious understanding not be tarnished by perjorative statements."

He added that the church was not seeking to "censor but to censure". The letter to McMurtry, he said, requested information about "Ontario's rule against hate literature," although he insisted the church was not really seeking a legal resolution of the dispute.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin accepts honorary doctor of humane letters degree from Yeshiva University during his recent U.S. tour. In an emotional address, Begin declared he accepted degree for "all his generation and for the people of Israel."

Economic plan unveiled

NEW YORK, N.Y. —

The government of Israel has unveiled a new economic package intended to protect foreign investors and offer additional advantages to new investors, Uriel Lynn, director for North America of the Israel Investment Authority, has announced.

"It is our desire to streamline and simplify the investment process and benefits, and thereby, make Israel a more desirable place for investing," Lynn explained.

"The new legislation, expected to take effect in two months, will add protection against inflation or devaluations, will increase investors' financial leverage and will make the process of doing business in Israel a lot easier.

"It will do so through a series of changes in the Law for the Encouragement of Capital Investment and the Law for the Encouragement of Industry, simplification of the approval process and by making our program of grants and loans both more attractive and simpler to utilize," he continued.

In a further move to simplify the investment process, approval for the investment program will be given without a feasibility study. A feasibility study will be carried out by the bank after a loan application has been filed.

Specifically, changes in the Law for the Encouragement of Capital Investment, which apply to new approved industries include:

— investors can receive government grants of up to 30%. Coupled with government loans of 40%, investors can receive up to 70% of their initial financial requirements.

— the loan will be at a flat rate of 40% of investment value in all regions, for a period of 10 years. This includes know-how, establishment and running expenses and — corporate tax will be reduced from 40% to 30%. On the remaining 70% there will be no income tax if profits are reinvested. If dividends are distributed, 15% income tax will be deducted at the source. The total tax result is 40.5% instead of 49%.

With respect to the Law for the Encouragement of Industry, which applies to all industries, there are three important changes:

— income tax on retained earnings will be reduced from 35% to 20% (after the flat rate of 40% corporate tax);

— in order to overcome the effects of inflation, investors will be able to revalue their inventories: 25% of its inflation impact in 1978 and 50% in 1979 and — to protect investors from currency devaluations, a further improvement of the existing method will be provided and a simplified way of protecting investors, attributed to equity investment in foreign currency, is presently being prepared.

"All these moves give new advantages to existing investors and those industrialists considering investing in Israel," Lynn explained.

"In combination with all of Israel's other advantages — duty free access to the Common Market, excellent research and development facilities, low cost of skilled labor and liberalization of the economy — these programs help make Israel one of the best places in the world for investment opportunities."

ORT and ISRAEL -
A Salute to a 30-Year Partnership

In November 1948, a few months after the State of Israel was established, Dr. Aron Syngalowski of World ORT Union went to Israel to lay the foundations for an ORT program. Shortly after his visit, the first ORT courses in the new Jewish State were opened in Jaffa for demobilized soldiers. Within a year, ORT schools were operating in Jerusalem, Kfar Saba, Ramla and Rehovot, with a total of 1,319 students enrolled.

During its first decade, ORT Israel conducted three types of programs: vocational high school programs for teenagers; post-secondary institutes offering two-year training courses for technicians; and adult courses geared to retraining and upgrading of skills.

While these programs continued to grow, others were added, such as the apprenticeship and factory school programs, in which the students could work and be paid as well as study. These work-study programs were particularly aimed at breaking the vicious cycle of poverty that entraps the undereducated.

Over the years ORT became Israel's largest single source of technical education at the high school level, and of training for jobs in heavy industry. One of ORT's major aims is to provide training courses that will promote the growth of Israel's major industries. Constant evaluation ensures that ORT courses keep pace with the latest technological developments. At the same time, careful attention is given to ORT students' personal development, physically, intellectually and culturally. All ORT instructors are prepared to substitute for each other, so that the regular school routines may go on even if military problems erupt.

ORT Israel now has over 51,000 students in some 90 schools from the Golan Heights to Eilat. ORT is deeply involved in all of Israeli life, accomplishing near-miracles as it grows, along with Israel.

Confrontation on U.S. policy

WASHINGTON (JTA) —

President Carter and National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski were bitterly attacked for their Middle East policies and, in turn, were personally defended in an unexpected confrontation of national political figures at the 19th annual policy conference of the American-Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) at the Washington-Hilton Hotel.

The attack was launched by Sen. Lowell Weicker (R.Conn.) who, in effect, accused the administration, and Brzezinski in particular, of using Jews as scapegoats. "We know from history," he said, "that time and time again, when national leaders run into difficulties, they found it convenient to blame their problems on the Jews and we know the results. If there is a meaningful distinction between those historical proclivities and the signals which Brzezinski is sending, I don't know what they are."

Weicker's remarks were interrupted 26 times by applause from the 1,000 AIPAC members and guests. It was especially thunderous when he declared: "If I were president and I had a national security advisor who singled out American Jews as an impediment to my policies, I would have his resignation before sundown and his reputation for breakfast."

A round of boos greeted White House Counsel Robert Lipshutz who, on the dais but not scheduled to speak, took the podium to respond to Weicker. He declared his "deep sorrow" over the senator's remarks, some of which, he said, "go beyond the bounds of criticism" and "impugns the character of the president of the United States and other officials of this administration, including my own.

"The senator is dead wrong and he knows it and you know it," Lipshutz said. He added that "America will never abandon Israel, never."

Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan (D.NY) also defended the integrity of Carter and Brzezinski and the intentions of the administration in the Middle East. It was Weicker's contention that Brzezinski believes "that world order politics" should "replace balance of power politics" and that this "requires that the U.S. disengage from its historic alliance with Israel."

Commander relieved of post

TEL AVIV (JTA) —

Col. Benjamin Ben Eliezer has been promoted to the rank of brigadier general and named to replace Brig. Gen. David Hagoel as military commander on the West Bank.

Hagoel was relieved of his command for his part in trying to cover up an incident in Beth Jalla near Bethlehem last March 21 when Israeli soldiers lobbed tear gas grenades into a local school. Seven pupils who jumped from the first floor window were injured.

Hagoel was summoned to the Defence Ministry and officially informed of his dismissal. Defence Minister Ezer Weizman and Chief of Staff Gen. Raphael Eytan concluded that Hagoel had knowledge of the facts of the incident when he flatly denied a report of it published in Time magazine.

Disciplinary measures have been taken against other senior officers of the West Bank command. Lt. Col. Nathan Rom and his deputy, Maj. Nissim Cohen, will face judiciary proceedings for disobeying regulations covering the use of force against civilians on the West Bank. Another major who commanded the unit in Beth Jalla has been reprimanded.

The shakeup in the West Bank command followed two investigations of events in Beth Jalla. The first, which absolved the officers and soldiers of any violation of regulations, did not satisfy the Defence Ministry and a second investigation was ordered. This determined that the Time account was essentially correct. Military regulations do not permit soldiers to enter schools or use firearms against pupils without specific authorization.

The incident at Beth Jalla followed demonstrations there and in other West Bank towns against Israel's invasion of Lebanon last March 19 in which school children joined.

Israeli soldiers chased the youngsters into the Iskander Houri school in Beth Jalla. At that point, the major in command, acting on his own initiative, ordered his men into the building over the protests of the headmaster and ordered them to fire tear gas grenades into a classroom.

The incident caused severe embarrassment to Israel and increased bitterness on the West Bank. But the Arabs of Beth Jalla, who are mostly Christians, welcomed the tough measures taken against the high ranking officers responsible.

Jewish founder of Egypt's Reds is shot dead

PARIS (JTA) —

The Jewish founder of the Egyptian Communist Party, Henri Curiel, 62, was shot to death recently by two assailants.

Later, a group identifying itself as the Delta Commando claimed responsibility for the attack saying Curiel was "a KGB agent, a defender of the Arab cause and a traitor to France where he had sought asylum."

Police sources said they had no immediate clues as to the group which carried out the killing. The Delta Commando was active during the Algerian war but was believed to have disappeared since.

Curiel had been accused of being a central figure in the "world revolutionary movement" and was placed under house arrest last October. He had since been allowed to return to his home in the Latin Quarter.

He had been active in pro-Communist congresses and organizations dealing with the Middle East and attended the Peace for the Middle East Congress which was held in Paris last autumn and attended by Israeli and Arab delegates. Curiel was born into a wealthy Jewish banking family in Egypt. He became active in left-wing organizations while still in his teens. He is credited with having helped found the Egyptian Communist Party.

Arrested by King Farouk's political police, he was released after a long and painful detention and exiled abroad in 1951.

A political refugee in France, he nonetheless is believed to have helped the Algerian National Front during the Algerian war, 1954-62, and was several times questioned by the French police. He was detained by the French security services for over one year during the Algerian war on a preventive basis.

In the 1960s, Curiel began taking an interest in Arab-Israeli relations and believed that an understanding between the two could be reached "via the Palestinian people." He often met dovish Israeli leaders such as Meir Pavil and Arye Eliav and helped put them in contact with various Palestinian circles.

NBC-TV used Nazi advisor

By ADENA BERKOWITZ

NEW YORK (JTA) —

A former Nazi SS officer was a technical adviser for the NBC-TV film drama, Holocaust, which was recently aired and was viewed by an estimated 120 million persons.

According to the show's producer, Robert Berger, who denied to the Jewish Telegraphic Agency that this item was being kept secret from the general as well as Jewish public, the man was hired on the advice of the German production agent, Pia Arnold, to advise the crew on such items as proper uniforms, correct medals worn by German officers, as well as the purported dialogue used by the Nazis as the Jews were being led to their deaths.

When questioned as to why survivors could not have served in an advisory capacity, he replied that in fact the curator of the Matthausen concentration camp museum, who himself spent four years at Auschwitz and is now a professor, was contacted but could not advise them on these matters. As for the use of other survivors, Berger insisted that no person who reached the place of death lived to tell about it.

The veteran television producer, who felt that making an issue of this was a "tempest in a teapot," related that this former Nazi, who served as adviser several years ago to the Odessa File film, was not on the actual staff of the NBC-TV Holocaust company and his role involved answering three questions over the telephone for which he was paid $150.

Berger added that the production staff was composed of many different nationalities and persons, including Jews, Europeans, an Egyptian, as well as "several ex-Wehrmacht officers."

Memorial dedicated to Holocaust victims

By RUTH KAHANE

OTTAWA —

The Ottawa Jewish community dedicated a Holocaust memorial at the community cemetery on the 33rd anniversary of the final collapse of Nazi Germany.

About 500 people, including representatives of various levels of government and the media, attended the dedication, a ceremony with an overriding tone of dignified remembrance, rather than one of mourning.

In dedicating and unveiling the torch-shaped granite memorial, Supreme Court Chief Justice Bora Laskin said despite the fact that "personal agony will pass with time ... the record must not be allowed to sink into historical oblivion.

"This Holocaust memorial and similar ones erected are seen as a continuing reminder of not only the struggle to live in freedom, but the struggle for the freedom to live."

Aba Beer, national chairman of the Canadian Jewish Congress Holocaust committee, said "for survivors who do not know where their loved ones departed, the monument serves as a substitute for 'kever avot'.

"Besides community monuments, we must make every effort to educate future generations. No effort should be spared to keep the meaning of the Holocaust alive for both the Jew and the non-Jew."

Chief Justice Bora Laskin dedicates Holocaust memorial in Ottawa. Crowd of 500 turned up for the event.

Ottawa Mayor Lorry Greenberg pledged that the Holocaust will not be repeated in this generation and to avoid the lack of intervention by governments during World War II, a commitment must be made today to ensure this does not happen in our time.

He said when the resolution equating Zionism and racism was passed in the United Nations, the Ottawa municipality, through the federal government, expressed its opposition in the UN.

President of the Ottawa Jewish Community Council Gilbert Greenberg cited the names of a number of Christian leaders who had made donations to the memorial fund and thanked chairman of the Holocaust memorial committee, Mendel Good, vice-chairman Harry Hecht, and co-chairmen of the Holocaust memorial campaign, Moshe Feig and William Grossman.

Under the direction of program chairman of the memorial dedication, Cantor Moshe Kraus, Rabbi Saul I. Aranov and choir led the recitation of memorial prayers and songs. Two students, Jordan Levitin and Karen Greenberg, presented selected readings in Yiddish and English.

A candlelighting ceremony for the six million was led by Huge Levendel, Peter Perel, Harry Hecht, William Grossman, Moshe Feig, Maria Gora, Dr. Gretl Fischer, and Cantor David Aptowitzer.

In unveiling the memorial, which carries the words of the Shema, Chief Justice Laskin led all those present in the recitation.

Youth top priority in survey

TORONTO [Staff] —

The issue of greatest concern to Toronto Jewish community leadership is youth and alienation, according to a recent survey.

The Jewish Cultural Council of the Toronto Jewish Congress mailed out a questionnaire earlier this year to identify the issues of concern to the community today. Two hundred and thirteen replies were received from 1,000 forms mailed out to the 850 members of the TJC council and other leaders.

Ten issues were labelled in the questionnaire and respondents were asked to check them off in order of importance.

Results have been reported to Congress leadership for action. Culture council Executive Director Edmond Lipsitz said there will be an analysis to determine why youth are alienated and what forces cause this — family, community or campus.

After youth, the second and third topics, respectively, in the survey results were "community concern for Jewish education — what are the limits" and "Israel or local community needs — is this a question of priority."

Interestingly, the council points out in a release that two of the issues hardly identified by the residents were "who is a Jew?" and "Soviet Jews — should they go to Israel?"

Other issues pinpointed were "government support for Jewish education — how to ask for it?" "the Jewish family — can it be rescued?" "Christian missionary activity and/or intermarriage — is it a community or rabbinical concern?" and "the Jewish elderly — are they all taken care of?"

Although there was only a 25% response to the questionnaire, Lipsitz said the results were satisfactory for a survey of this sort.

Israeli seeking 'Peace' backers

OTTAWA —

Prof. Judah Matras of the Hebrew University, now a visiting professor of sociology and anthropology at Carleton University, is seeking would-be supporters of the Peace Now Movement in Israel.

On his own initiative, he is contacting the people involved in Israel with the hope of sending financial and moral support, and says support for the movement from outside Israel "will help give legitimacy to these ideas."

Matras says he disagrees with the "monolithic support" approach of Diaspora Jews to the Israeli status quo and thinks "Israel would be better served by a positive use of some of the talent and analytical power that's available in its community of supporters."

Ghost of Nasser

Should Egypt chart an Egyptian-first policy or should it entangle itself in inter-Arab affairs with a Nasserist vengeance? The question is a topical one in Egypt today, and President Anwar Sadat must debate it with his advisors as he tries to decide whether he should abandon the search for a comprehensive settlement or press for a bilateral agreement with Israel.

Such a question would not have arisen during the long rule of Gamal Abdel Nasser, who embroiled his country in a series of foreign adventures as part of his attempt to assert leadership in the divided Arab world. His successor, Sadat, left the impression in the early 1970s that he might jettison Nasser's pan-Arab policy. But the exigencies of the Arab-Israeli dispute prevented him from doing anything about his apparent political predilections, while the post-Yom Kippur War period dashed such speculation.

In the aftermath of Sadat's peace initiative — which underscored Egypt's desperate economic condition — intellectuals in Cairo revived the debate. And it increased in intensity following the assassination in Cyprus of Al Ahram's editor and the subsequent death of 15 Egyptian commandos sent to rescue Yusuf Sibai.

The call for a reassessment of Egypt's foreign policy was widely aired in Al Ahram, Al Akhbar and Akhbar al-Yom in March of this year by one of Egypt's leading intellectuals, Tawfiq Hakim. In his articles, which caused quite a stir in Egypt and other Arab countries, Hakim argued that Egypt should become neutral — "like Switzerland and Austria."

He observed that Egypt should focus its attention on solving its pressing economic and social problems, thereby implying that his nation should disentangle itself from the quagmire of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Not everyone agreed with Hakim's analysis. Louis Awad, a leftist who belongs to Egypt's resurrected Wafd party, noted that Egypt cannot ignore its geo-political position in the region and must, therefore, participate in inter-Arab rivalries. In a speech to the People's Assembly in mid-April, Butrus Ghali, minister of state for foreign affairs, denounced the call for neutrality, labelling it a "separatist" trend. Sadat himself told October magazine in an interview that neutralism was "defeatist" and was supported by "the enemies of the regime."

Despite the backlash, Egypt has good reason to consider an Egyptian-first option, at least for the next decade, so that it can put its house in order.

First, there is a growing awareness in the country that Egypt has contributed disproportionately to the Arab cause, not only in blood (100,000 casualties in four wars and numerous skirmishes), but in money as well ($40 billion Egyptian pounds spent to purchase military equipment).

Second, there is a feeling among some intellectuals that the Arabs have not repaid Egypt for its pan-Arab efforts. Writing in Al Jumhuriyya last December, Ibrahim Wirdani complained that all Egypt has received in gratitude from its fellow Arabs is a "straw crown". By the same token, he wrote bitterly, the Arabs have tied Egypt down with what he termed "Arab chains". In other words, they have questioned Egypt's policies and failed to understand them.

Third, a growing number of Egyptians are disenchanted with the Palestinians whom, they think, expect Egypt to fight their battles. Reflecting this mood in Akhbar al-Yom recently, writer Ibrahim Sadeh said the Palestinians can no longer "call upon our troops to shed their blood for the people who shot them in the back."

Fourth, the Egyptians are simply weary of the poverty that grips their land. Peace, they say, is the only way to break the cycle of impoverishment.

Be that as it may, Egypt will find it extremely difficult to adopt an Egyptian-first policy. The ebb and flow of Arab politics is such that Egypt cannot hold itself aloof from day-to-day developments in the Middle East. Egyptian intellectuals notwithstanding. How this imperative may affect Egyptian-Israeli relations is hard to say. Certainly, the absence of an Egypt-first policy will make it harder for Cairo and Jerusalem to hammer out a settlement.

In praise of Borochov

Ber Borochov's contribution to Zionist theory was monumental, but who remembers him today, 61 years after his untimely death at the age of 30. We've all heard of Ahad Ha'am, Theodor Herzl, Chaim Weizmann and Vladimir Jabotinsky. But who among us, except for the diehards, recall Borochov's name and deeds with any familiarity?

In the pantheon of Zionism, Borochov was an intellectual force to be reckoned with, a theorist who attempted to fuse Jewish nationalism with socialism, an organizer who helped establish the World Union of Poale Zion.

Borochov was a member of the Russian Social Democratic Party and his espousal of Zionism led to his expulsion. But long before his dismissal, Borochov was out of favor with the powers-that-be on the Russian left. In 1907, he attended a lecture in Liege, Belgium, given by a man named Vladimir Lenin, and at the close of his talk Borochov rose and presented a case for Socialist Zionism.

"You are trying to sit on two chairs at once," Lenin replied. "The problem is, you are on the empty space between the two chairs."

Nevertheless, Borochov persevered in his effort to synthesize what appeared to Lenin to be irreconcilable ideologies, formulating some of his most important ideas in a seminal essay, "Nationalism and the Class Struggle".

He argued that nationalism was not a passing phenomenon, and declared that "the Jewish problem migrates with the Jews." Borochov noted that Jews were marginal to the socio-economic structure of all countries in which they were a minority.

In a subsequent essay, "The Economic Development of the Jewish People", he described Jews as exploited, both as a proletariat and as a national group. In his view, Jewish emancipation could only be achieved through the normalization of the Jews' socio-economic profile, in a territorial base in Palestine.

The root of the Jewish problem, he added, was the divorce of the Jews from their historical homeland. For Borochov, a people "without a country, without an independent economic basis, and trapped in alien economic relations," were doomed to be powerless and objects of prey. National self-liberation could restore to Jewish "existence a healthy socio-economic basis, which is the keystone to national existence and national culture and the basis for a fruitful class struggle and socialist transformation of national life."

Such a development, he predicted, would herald the inevitable exodus of Jews from the Diaspora.

Borochov did not live long enough to nurture his ideas, dying of pneumonia on Dec. 17, 1917. Forty-five years after his death, his body was transferred from Kiev to a small cemetery near the Sea of Galilee, next to the graves of Moses Hess, Nachman Syrkin and Berl Katznelson, three giants in the history of Zionism.

Sixty-one years after his passing, Borochov's ideas are not as popular as they once were, either in most Zionist or socialist circles, and indeed his legacy in modern Israel is mirrored only on kibbutzim and, possibly, moshavim. But his name lives on as a bright beacon in the Zionist firmament.

Debt of gratitude

A sense of history is essential to the understanding of our times. Thus we cannot look at events in the Middle East without the historical perspective.

People protest that the Israeli invasion of Lebanon is "excessive" as a reaction to the murder of a few dozen people in Israel by the Arab terrorists. The United Nations condemn Israeli "aggression." The use of force is unpopular today.

What we need to remember is that the Israelis rely entirely on force for their survival. Look at the record:

— In 1943, 450,000 Jews were sealed up in the ghetto in Warsaw by invading Nazi forces. They resisted and died to the last man.

— In 1948, the Arab nations which signed the peace agreement with the newly-born state of Israel broke the agreement and invaded.

— In 1956, President Nasser of Egypt, under Soviet influence, seized the Suez Canal.

— In 1967, Egypt, rearmed by Russia, ordered UN troops out of Egypt and precipitated another Arab-Israeli war.

— In 1973, Egypt and Syria, with Soviet arms and advisers, launched the Yom Kippur War while the Israelis were at prayer.

— In March, 1978, Arab commandos with communist arms landed from the sea to terrorize the Israeli countryside, while peace negotiations were going on with Egypt.

In the past 35 years, the Jews have borne the brunt of battle, first with the Nazis and later with the Communists. Always they have been in the front line and have suffered proportionately greater casualties than any Western nation.

We who live in more fortunate conditions, under the U.S. nuclear shield, can ill afford to criticize the use of force. Instead we owe Israel a debt of gratitude for making our own survival possible.

Once he was on Hitler's death list, but 'ambassador of Yiddish' Leftwich remains prolific writer at age of 85

Sholem Asch

By HENRY SREBRNIK

LONDON, Eng. —

The man who has been called the "ambassador of Yiddish", and who has over the past 50 years helped — through his innumerable translations, essays and books — to popularize Yiddish literature, is still, at 85, hale and hearty, and living in the Highgate district of north London.

Joseph Leftwich, who has played Boswell to so many Jewish Dr. Johnsons, is now a squat and wizened silver-haired little man, as he sits in the living room of his big three-storey house with his wife of 51 years, Sala, reminiscing about his full and active life, and the various Jewish personalities he has known over the years. We all sip tea, and I express my astonishment at the incredible outpouring of works that have sprung from his most prolific pen. (It seems as though half the shelves that surround us are filled with his own books.)

He has written countless articles in newspapers, journals and magazines, in both Yiddish and English. As well, Leftwich was the first to introduce over 300 Yiddish writers to the English-speaking world, in his two major anthologies of Yiddish prose and poetry: Yisroel: The First Jewish Omnibus (1933) and The Golden Peacock (1939). He has also written a major biography of Israel Zangwill, with whom he was very close; co-authored a life of Theodor Herzl; translated the novels of the Yiddish-Russian author Zalman Shneour and the poetry of former Israeli president Zalman Shazar, and edited the seminal, two-volume collection of essays from the Yiddish, The Way We Think, as well as the works of Y.L. Peretz.

"I'm still writing," laughed the man who was born of Polish Jewish parentage in Zutphen, Holland in 1892, grew up in poverty in London's Whitechapel, and left school to earn a living at the age of 14. "I was pitchforked into Jewish life, immersed in Yiddish. The walls spoke Yiddish to me!

"If I had had access to more papers, more editors, more publishers, I would have written 10 times as much."

The man, who was editor of the Jewish Telegraphic Agency in London from 1920 to 1930 is, apart from his writings and translations, even today still active in the Yiddish PEN centre, and also carries on a voluminous correspondence with Jewish figures around the world. Sala, who was born and raised in Poland before marrying "Lefty" (as she fondly calls him) here in London, serves as his typist and "medical advisor", as she puts it.

As an interpreter of Yiddish literature, Leftwich has through the years rubbed shoulders with many of the greats in the field. Abraham Zutzkever, the Israeli Yiddish poet, speaking in tribute to Leftwich at the celebrations honoring him on his 75th birthday a decade ago, called him "a bright light, a perpetuity," and added that for him, Yiddish has never been a "step-child speech." And this year Jacob Zipper, the Montreal pedagogue, noted how much Leftwich was to be admired for his "humanity and his deep and unshaken Jewish faith."

He also knew Sholem Asch, and remarked how unfair were the accusations levelled against the great author in his so-called

Joseph Leftwich at 85

"Christological period" during World War II, when he wrote The Nazarene, Mary and The Apostle. "It was sheer envy, and Asch took it very hard," Leftwich said sadly.

Like Asch, extraordinarily fond of Polish Jewry, Leftwich has written much about that tragic country, and has visited it many times, his last trip coming only five years ago. He insisted that there was still an active Jewish community in Poland, despite the dwindling numbers, and that they still "cling to the Yiddish word." He refused to accept the possibility that we have witnessed the end of Polish Jewry. "It's been said before," he argued, "for instance after the Chmielnicki pogroms of 1648. As long as one Polish Jew remains, it's still as though all of Polish Jewry exists.

When asked about the future of Yiddish literature, he handed me a copy of The Golden Peacock, and opened it to the first page, dedicated "To the Yiddish poets who will be writing Yiddish poetry 50 years hence." He smiled. "That's the answer to your question."

Though Yiddish has been the constant in his life, Leftwich has otherwise certainly had a varied set of political convictions. He started off as a socialist — "I was a schoolboy living in the same street as the anarchist Rudolf Rocker in the East End" — but later became a disciple of Zangwill, whose Jewish Territorialist Organization wanted a Jewish homeland in any part of the world, and not necessarily Palestine. Though Leftwich to this day writes in the New York-based Yiddish journal Oyfn Shvel (On The Threshold), published by the successor Freeland League, he admits that these schemes for a Jewish homeland in such unlikely locales as Surinam, Madagascar, Uganda and western Australia were fantasies. "Even the Soviet Birobidzhan project was 10 times more important."

Later, he went through a Zionist Revisionist phase. "Zeev Jabotinsky was another of my friends. As a person, he was lovable, delightful. He foresaw what was coming long before the others agreed to it."

Despite his Zionism, Jabotinsky was culturally very Russian, and Leftwich took delight in recounting an anecdote where Jabotinsky, unthinkingly, once addressed him in Russian, which Leftwich did not understand. Said Jabotinsky: "What kind of Jew are you, not to know Russian!"

Another prominent Zionist friend, later to become the foreign minister and second premier of Israel, was Moshe Sharett. "He was a particular pal. When we were in Israel in 1953, Sharett was annoyed with me, because I hadn't right away looked him up. He was my oldest friend in Israel. But Sharett fell afoul of Ben-Gurion, who was not a very pleasant person. Sharett was not the only one he kicked out. There was Berl Locker, the Mapai theoretician, and many others. He was a kicker-outer."

Leftwich showed great concern with Israel's future, seeing Arab intransigence as an insurmountable problem. "Jabotinsky called it the 'iron wall' we will never get over. I don't see the prospects for peace. But I do hope everything will be all right — there are so many Jewish lives at stake."

Leftwich considers himself today "a Jew, not a Zionist. Berl Katzenelson once said of me, that I'm already a whole Jew, and Zionism is meant to bring Jews back to their people. Judaism, to me, is more than Zionism and nationalism; it embraces them." He has become more religious in his old age. "This has been a very slow development," he remarked.

The man who was once on Hitler's blacklist — "I was to be one of the first to be shot when they landed here!" — considers himself "a son of Anglo-Jewry. It is something worth belonging to and worth fighting to improve."

Joseph Leftwich has been in his own right almost a composite of the various movements and ideologies that have swirled through the Jewish world — socialist, anarchist, Yiddishist, Territorialist, Revisionist. As someone put it, he might well say, of his long and fruitful life, that "nothing Jewish do I consider strange to me."

Senate approval a severe blow to Israel

Arms deal watershed in U.S.-Arab relations

mideast analysis

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

It was one of the biggest Congressional battles in years and when it was all over on Monday night the Israelis had been dealt quite a severe blow.

By a 54 to 44 vote, the U.S. Senate approved President Jimmy Carter's controversial plan to sell Saudi Arabia, Egypt and Israel fighter jets as part of an all-or-nothing package. Up to the very last minute, Israel and its Congressional supporters fought the $4.8 billion package, arguing that the dispatch of sophisticated jets to Saudi Arabia and Egypt would upset the balance of power and imperil Middle East peace talks.

The Israelis lost the battle because they were outnumbered from the beginning and because the mood of the country had changed somewhat since Anwar Sadat's "sacred mission" to Jerusalem last November. As a result, Saudi Arabia will get its 60 F-15s and Egypt its 50 F-5Es. Israel will be the recipient of 75 F-16s and 35 F-15s. (Within the last few years, Egypt has bought U.S. C-130 transport planes, drones and jeeps. In 1976, the Saudis got U.S. air-to-air and air-to-ground missiles.)

To sweeten the bitter pill, the Carter administration gave Israel an additional 20 F-15s — from 15 to 35 — and imposed a number of restrictions on the Saudis. Carter is said to have given written assurances that the Saudi F-15s will not be equipped with air-to-surface missiles or be based at Tabuk, the air base relatively close to Eilat.

Despite the last minute compromise — which apparently swung crucial votes away from Israel — Israel has suffered a considerable defeat. Approval of the sales means that the U.S. and the moderate Arab states have entered into a radically new military and political relationship, at the expense of Israel. Israel's "special relationship" with Washington is not necessarily as special anymore. Conversely, Washington has upgraded its ties with the Saudis and the Egyptians in a way which might have been unimaginable just two years ago.

Clearly, the successful passage of the arms package through the Senate — which is hardly inhospitable to Israel — represents a watershed in Arab-American relations. It caps America's efforts to forge closer relations with Cairo and Riyadh, and possibly foreshadows a similar arms deal between the U.S. and Syria within the next few years.

The Carter administration, fresh from a Senate victory over the Panama Canal issue, staked its reputation on the arms package, enlisting all of its friends into the fray. For their part, the Saudis threw some of their most articulate spokesmen, and lavished unlimited funds, into the Congressional struggle.

Support for Saudis tied to oil prices

In pushing for the package, the administration and its allies used several key arguments. A failure to supply jets to Egypt would weaken the Sadat regime and consequently endanger his peace initiative, officials said. Former secretary of state Henry Kissinger, the architect of the Arab-American rapprochement, articulated that view: "I believe Sadat has played one of the historical roles of our period. He has moved his country from a position of confrontation with the United States to a position of cooperation . . . he has broken his military relationship with the Soviet Union . . . which has contributed so much to the tensions in the Middle East."

As for the Saudis, the administration suggested that a refusal to sell Riyadh the high-performance planes might affect their willingness to keep oil prices stable and to increase production to meet Western energy requirements in the next decade. It might also expose them to radicals such as Iraq and South Yemen, it added.

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that the sales were in the best interests of the United States, Israel, Saudi Arabia and Egypt. "In our best judgment, the . . . sales will maintain the basic military balance in the region," he said, echoing an earlier remark made by the president. Defence Secretary Harold Brown, hewing to the same theme, observed that Israel would be relatively stronger, while Paul Warnke, director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, said that Saudi support for an Arab-Israeli peace might be jeopardized if they did not get their F-15s.

Kissinger noted that rejection of the package would damage U.S. interests in the area. "It would be grave for our security, for the security of the Middle East," if the proposal were turned down, he said.

Bitter pill sweetened with 20 extra jets

Khaled tells Carter F-15s for defence

To bolster their cause, the Saudis sent several Western-educated cabinet ministers to Washington, and in private discussions, the U.S. envoy to Saudi Arabia, John West, argued forcefully that the arms package was a test of U.S. intentions in the region. King Khaled, in a letter to the White House, said that the F-15s would be used for defence purposes only, and warned that "stepped-up Communist expansion in the area" rendered the sales essential.

Israel, through the American-Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC), asserted that the F-15s would provide the Saudis with the capability, for the first time, to directly threaten Israel. Although the receipt of American jets by Egypt would represent the first U.S. delivery of so-called lethal military equipment to an Arab confrontation state that participated in the Yom Kippur War, the Israelis were not as concerned about the F-5Es, since they lack the speed and potency of the F-15. Consequently, Israel attempted to scuttle the package by dwelling on the potency of the F-15, which former Israeli chief of staff, Mordechai Gur, has termed an "incredible aircraft".

The senators backing Israel cited three main reasons for opposing the package. It would greatly strengthen the Arabs and thereby diminish Israel's deterrent image; it would conflict with the administration's pledge to curb the transfer of U.S. weaponry abroad, and it would engender a tougher Israeli negotiating stance in peace talks.

On Monday night, three months after Carter introduced the package, these pleas fell on mostly deaf ears, thereby ushering in a new era in Arab-American relations. As the National Association of Arab Americans put it on the eve of the Senate vote: "The proposed sales should be interpreted politically, not militarily. They represent official acknowledgment of the growing political and economic bonds between America and the Arab world."

Intolerance a fact of life in Quebec as 1930s saw anti-Semitism proliferate

By STEPHEN KURTZ

Throughout the 1930s and especially after Hitler and the Nazis came to power in 1933, anti-Semitic parties proliferated in the Western world. Canada itself was not immune to such organized anti-Semitism. In Quebec, Adrien Arcand was the leader of a largely French-Canadian fascist group that was probably to blame for a series of anti-Semitic incidents in July-August, 1939, that focused attention on the problem of anti-Semitism in Quebec.

The scene of the episode was Ste. Agathe des Monts in the Laurentian vacation area north of Montreal. In 1937 and 1938, there had been occasions when Jewish vacationers had been pressured into leaving certain areas. In addition, during the summer of 1939, Jews had been greeted with signs at local train stations telling them that they were not wanted in the area.

Ste. Agathe was a small town of approximately 3,000 inhabitants. During the summer, however, the influx of Gentile and Jewish vacationers almost doubled the town's population. The popularity of the area was such that some of the French-Canadians sold their property to Jews and other tourists. Local merchants enjoyed a small boom.

Not all of the local population, or clergy, were so entranced by the wave of tourism. Some of the year-round citizenry complained that the Jews had taken over the town and were forcing the local population off the sidewalks. The parish was also losing revenue through the sale of Catholic-owned land to non-Catholics. The combination of these two factors, and the added ingredient of Arcand's anti-Semitic followers in the region, created a powder-barrel of prejudice that almost exploded.

On July 23, a Montreal lawyer, William Grossman, was arrested for obstructing the sidewalk in Ste. Agathe. On Sunday, July 24, Monseigneur Bazinet preached a sermon decrying the loss of Ste. Agathe's French-Canadian character and urged his parishioners not to sell their property to Jews.

That same Sunday, Arcand addressed 2,000 followers in the area on the theme of "the Jewish menace." Throughout the week, the atmosphere remained tense. Then late Friday night and early Saturday morning, the spark ignited the powder barrel.

During that time some group had put up over 200 bilingual signs reading: "Les Juifs ne sont pas desires ici. Ste. Agathe est un village Canadien-Francais et nous le garderons ainsi." Below in English was written: "Jews are not welcome here in Ste. Agathe, so scram while the going is good."

These notices drew the attention of the Montreal press to the scene and national attention was created when The Toronto Globe and Mail ran a photograph and front page story of the event. The next day, Jews and police removed all signs on public property and the police issued warnings to those with the signs on private property that they were liable to proceedings by Jewish tourists.

The clergy claimed that the church had had nothing to do with the incident, but Monseigneur Bazinet again decried the loss of the village's character. At the beginning of the week, he began to take steps to form a committee of French and English Christians — that would prohibit the sale of land to Jews. During the week, Jews were publicly insulted and there was even an attempt made to burn down a bridge connecting a Jewish-owned island-hotel to the mainland.

The openness of the anti-Semitism prompted some Quebec politicians to take action. Peter Bercovitch, the Jewish member of Parliament for Montreal-Cartier, wrote letters to both church and civil authorities warning about the detrimental effect an anti-Semitic campaign would have on the area as a vacation centre. He also publicly deplored the situation. On the other hand, the member for the area in the Quebec Assembly blamed the Jews for creating the situation. Tensions continued to remain high as the Grossman case came to court. However, cooler heads prevailed and the charge was withdrawn; Grossman never entered a plea and was instead directed to pay court costs.

By this time, the Quebec provincial police had sent an official investigator to view the situation. He was accompanied by a Jewish member of the Quebec Assembly, Louis Fitch. Both men issued statements about the cooling of the situation and of the over-emphasis by the press.

Fitch, speaking through Premier Maurice Duplessis, personally guaranteed the safety of Jews in the area. At mass on the following Sunday, the clergy returned to more traditional topics and made little comment on the previous two weeks' activities. By the beginning of the second week in August, and with the war in Europe steadily drawing closer, the troubles in Ste. Agathe des Monts disappeared as news.

Who instigated the posting of the placards will never be known for certain. Whether the clergy's fears for the village's character were based on nationalism or bigotry cannot be easily answered. The local Assembly member felt that he was expressing the will of his constituents, but was countered by his premier (at least publicly). All of these questions are problematic, but the week of Ste. Agathe should be remembered as a time when intolerance rather than tolerance was an accepted fact of life for the Jewish community in Quebec.

Reader commends HIAS, but says 'it's time to fold'

Dear Editor:

I am very saddened by the public debate about HIAS' role in helping Soviet Jews. HIAS did a great job in the post-World War II and the early '50s, but it should have ceased existing with the rise of the state of Israel.

For Soviet Jews and other displaced Jews there is only one way: Israel.

As a simple Jew, I say: Thank You HIAS. Now it's time to fold. I humbly suggest a campaign to end HIAS' good services in Europe and elsewhere.

Dear Editor:

One of the best kept secrets of the Banting and Best discovery of insulin (Canadian Jewish News, April 14) was that the idea that later led to the discovery was made in the thesis paper of a Dr. Moses, whose first name escapes me. Dr. Moses died in Philadelphia within the past year. While a student at the University of Toronto, Dr. Moses, in writing a thesis, came to the conclusion that made the discovery possible. Working on his paper, the two doctors were able to prove in practice what Dr. Moses had advocated in theory.

First conviction under hate propaganda legislation proves law can be used with intelligence, humanity

By B.G. KAYFETZ

TORONTO —

Seven and a half years after its enactment into law, Canada's hate propaganda legislation has been upheld in court. The first conviction under the 1970 criminal code amendments took place recently in Windsor, Ont. in the case of Robert Buzzanga and Jean Durocher.

The Windsor area has been the locale of a heated controversy centring on the question of whether a separate all-French high school should be built. On the heels of this hotly-debated issue, a virulently anti-French Canadian leaflet was circulated in the area accusing French Canadians of being an obstinate, unruly race. Investigation established that the authors and distributers were the two above named, both 30, both Franco-Ontarians. One, in fact, was engaged as co-ordinator of French language services in a project subvented by the federal government.

The trial of the two men, under the hate propaganda amendments of the Criminal Code, revealed some intriguing facts. Why in the world would two French Canadians distribute anti-French hate literature? Were they self-haters? Far from it. In the atmosphere of the heated air of the Essex County school controversy they were trying to foment a French Canadian backlash. They wanted to so enrage and shock their Franco-Ontarian compatriots at this display of "anglo" prejudice that they would rise up in indignation, demand their full rights in language and in education and develop a true consciousness of their ethnicity and national identity.

But the crude ruse backfired. The judge, Joseph McMahon, found that the two zealots had stirred up hatred in two directions: against the Franco-Ontarians by the ugly attacks directed against them in the leaflet, and against the English by the impression that the leaflet was an "anglo" creation. Judge McMahon, accordingly, found the two guilty, sentenced them to two years in prison but suspended the sentence. This he did, as he said, in view of the current tension in Canada between French and English; he did not wish to create martyrs whose fate could be exploited to expand and further worsen this tension.

It was a most interesting judgment which proves a number of things. First, that contrary to the glib assumptions of many in the 1960s, the anti-hate law was neither framed or meant to be applied as a law "to protect the Jews". Its first application affected neither the Jews nor had any link with anti-Semitism or neo-Nazis. Secondly, it was used in a situation where Canada's classical dichotomy — the two solitudes of French and English — had created a problem.

In other words, far from arising in the marginal area of anti-Semitism it emerged in the most crucial area of Canada's historical problem of ethnic dualism, which was an argument used by its proponents. Canada, they said, needed such a law because of its history and make-up.

Thirdly, the judge's action belies another argument used by the press or the earlier opponents of the law — that it could be misused and abused as a club against dissenters and unpopular dissidents. This still may be possible, but the Windsor case also proves that a court can implement the law with intelligence, discretion and far-sighted humanity. No doubt, the judge had in mind the Louis Riel hanging of 1885, which did create a martyr whose memory polarizes Canada to this day.

All in all it has been an instructive case lesson in the application of this statute which was so feared that in 1969 the Toronto Globe and Mail denounced it in six editorials, in a two-month period, as a threat to freedom of expression, freedom of the press, and whatnot.

Review of 'Holocaust' unfair: reader

Dear Editor:

I am writing as a high school student of Jewish history particularly interested in the period of the Holocaust. I was quite disappointed with the quality of the critique of Holocaust, written by Lynn Slotkin. I understand that many critics felt that this dramatization could not in any way actually depict the true horror of the period, but I see no reason to pick on petty items.

I felt that the critique was not giving any credit to the time and effort that went into this important production. Instead, Lynn Slotkin proceeded to criticize and place emphasis on such trivial objects as "it was hard to believe that the Jews in the drama were slowly starving to death and usually sick when the actors portraying them looked so well fed and healthy."

Why must this necessarily be a point against the drama? Or perhaps she would have preferred to have the actors abstain from proper nutrition before the filming, so as to obtain the correct physical characterizations? Why not overlook this point, as it could not obviously be helped, and commend the dramatization for a most effective script and hardworking, exceptional actors?

I think that Ms. Slotkin should have placed emphasis on the more important points of the show, rather than insist that "events were rendered unbelievable because of their coincidence in the story, not because they were horrible facts." I do sincerely believe that the facts were rendered unbelievable due to the fact that the atrocities were committed on such an intensely grandiose scale. I feel that Ms. Slotkin should take into consideration that this dramatization was not intended exclusively for the Jewish population but basically as an important historical drama, to be viewed more importantly, by non-Jews who had never heard, or wanted to hear about the Holocaust.

I realize that the dramatization had its faults, but I do think that for its aims and purposes it accomplished what it set out to do in an informative and interesting way.

Dear Editor:

The Holocaust memorial service, held this year on May 3 at Beth Emeth Bais Yehuda Synagogue, lacked the dignity usually associated with such gatherings.

As a survivor, I was particularly incensed with the loose treatment of facts displayed by speakers, who managed to transform this solemn occasion into a political rally. The only exception was Prof. Emil Fackenheim, whose contribution was lost. No where in my personal experiences, nor in my extensive reading of Holocaust literature, did I encounter the existence of disunity, the apparent theme of the speakers, amongst the population of the ghettos or in the camps. The contrary was the reality of Jewish life under the tyranny of the Hitlerites.

I found the fancy story of an attempt to buy off a child with gold and the existence of a rabbinical court in a death camp totally incredible. So was the claim that only Zionist youth led active resistance in the Warsaw Ghetto or elsewhere in occupied Europe. Such a treatment of the truth lends credence to those who attempt to negate our tragedy.

I hope fervently that in the future serious efforts will be made to bring back the dignity that is called for in honoring our martyrs who perished, and enable the survivors to shed a tear in remembering their personal tragedies.

L. Lenkinski,

Dear Editor:

I am writing to protest the manner in which funds are raised for Israel. The methods I refer to include ruthless pressure tactics such as public pledging and the unauthorized publication of donation lists, as well as promotional gimmickry such as the organization of dinners with visiting Israeli personalities for the "big givers".

I note from an issue of The Canadian Jewish News of a few weeks ago that an important Israeli visitor will privately brief select members of the Toronto Jewish community on the situation in the Middle East. Is one's contribution to Jewish society measured by the size of one's pocketbook?

I would be the last person to deny that Israel is in dire financial straits. I am a Zionist and I believe that it is imperative that the Diaspora support Israel in every way possible. However, I question the extent to which the end justifies the means and I feel certain that the negative effect of the above tactics outweigh the imagined positive benefits.

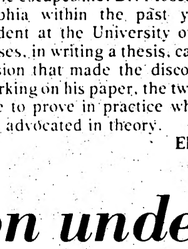
Reviewing Mother's Day phenomenon



By J. B. SALSBERG

Thank heaven for my Uncle Eliezer and his Thursday-night steambath regulars. He and his friends serve as my gadflies; but they also can be relied upon to jump to my defence.

My good uncle's steambath crowd never tires of urging me to do battle in this privileged corner against all sham, humbug and, of course, against all real evil. But if, as a result of my obliging them, I get into hot water, they jump to their battle stations to defend the ramparts of this blessed citadel. Oh, they are OK, those dependable regulars.

Uncle Eliezer, his friend Mendle (who can read the small type of what's printed or written), as well as all the others also serve as my barometer of the atmospheric changes in public moods. Now, for instance, the group decided last Thursday that this column is sagging under the weight of heavy topics that I've been piling on week after week. So they decided, during the spirited repast that follows the agonizing pleasure of being steamed to the bone, that the Mother's Day phenomenon needs to be carefully reviewed and, perhaps, reformed.

"You call this a lighter topic," I said to my uncle after he presented the unanimous recommendation of his friends. "Why I may get into serious trouble with at least half of my good readers — the ladies." "Ah," said Mendle with a smile, "but for every lady you may anger there will be one you will win."

"Well," said Uncle Eliezer, who evidently anticipated my concern, "you see, J.B., some mothers may not like what we — I mean you — will say, but every mother-in-law will surely love what will be proposed. And," he concluded triumphantly, "there are almost as many mothers-in-law as there are mothers, no?" I couldn't dispute this mathematical logic and agreed to join them in their new crusade. Here it is.

On Mother's Day, every mother is honored, feted and showered with gifts. The publicity departments of the merchandisers and the speakers at the formal Mother's Day breakfasts, luncheons or dinners depict the mothers as angelic creatures who are sweet, loving, self-sacrificing, giving, caring, long-suffering, self-effacing and, generally speaking, out of this world.

"OK," says Mendle, "maybe they are all like that and maybe not, but how come that when these same angels become mothers-in-law they become, according to so may people, witches, demons and vixens?

"How do you explain such a switch," Sam, another spokesman for the group, asks of me?

I tried to be reasonable in the discussion that followed between us. Maybe, I suggested, that all mothers are not really angels in women's clothes but, on the other hand, all mothers-in-law are not bad either. Maybe it is that the disatisfied husbands or wives are responsible for distorting the angelic visage of mothers into the unpleasant picture of the mother-in-law? To clinch my argument, I stated that I know many men and women who like their in-laws as much — if not more — than they like their own parents.

But that didn't quite satisfy my uncle's buddies. The world, they said, isn't crazy and the world says that sweet mothers become bitter pills as soon as they become mothers-in-law.

So, what do you propose to do about it, I asked them? They evidently waited for this question and they proceeded to unfold two proposals.

Half of the Thursday-night steambath regulars believe that there should be a process of elimination, a sort of contest for those mothers who have proven to be good mothers-in-law and, therefore, deserving to be honored on Mother's Day.

The other half of the group, that included my Uncle Eliezer, dissented from that proposal. They were afraid that it would lead to all sorts of family strife, disruption and, heaven forbid, break-ups of families. No, no, no, they argued. It's a dangerous proposal.

Their own plan, which was obviously proposed and championed by my uncle, was a typically Jewish one. It was a middle-of-the-road plan. The Uncle Eliezer plan, supported by a full half of the steambath regulars, was that we don't temper with Mother's Day, that we leave it as it is. This is especially necessary for the sake of the young mothers and even of the older mothers who aren't yet mothers-in-law. Why should they be punished?

Sam also made the point that nowadays an increasing number of mothers have to wait until old age before their children decide to stop having "relationships" and get married in the good old way. The least we can do for such mothers is to give them a bit of naches on Mother's Day.

My uncle's plan, therefore, was that while Mother's Day remains untouched, we should establish a Mother-in-law Day one month later.

He argued that a Mother-in-law Day would be good for business and the business community would, therefore, support the idea. It would, he argued with unassailable logic, come to pass that Mother-in-law Day would help to improve all mothers-in-law and make them as good, maybe, as mothers are, or are supposed to be.

In expectation of Mother-in-law Day, mothers-in-law would go out of their way to be sweet to their in-laws. If not fully reformed at once, they would surely be moved by the sweet words that their disliked sons or daughters-in-law would say about them in public on such days.

I support my Uncle Eliezer's plan. Don't you? Let's try it. What can we lose?

On Montreal campuses...

Anti-Zionist activities sporadic

By JANICE ARNOLD
[Second of three parts]

MONTREAL — Anti-Zionist activities at Montreal universities, with the possible exception of the Universite de Quebec in Montreal, have tended to be sporadic and with little direction.

At the English universities of McGill and Concordia, anti-Israel or pro-Palestinian activities are usually led by the Canadian Communist League (Marxist-Leninist) with the wide participation of the Iranian and other foreign students. They often distribute literature published by the Arab League or Canada-Palestine Committee in Ottawa and, although it is generally accepted that they receive financial and organizational help from Arabs through the Association Quebec-Palestine, no one seems to know to what extent.

Run by Rezeq Faraj, a schoolteacher, from the headquarters of the Confederation of National Trade Unions (CNTU), the AQP has a ready supply of Arab propaganda in English and French.

A poster in French, "The Peace of Sadat," showing the Egyptian president with a Magen David through his nose, was sent to all the French universities and CEGEPS by the AQP. Another poster in English frequently seen plastered on walls is one of a child "crucified" on a Magen David with the inscription, "Palestine 1948 Lebanon 1978."

Faraj was also at the forefront of last year's anti-Israel street demonstration organized by the Marxist-Leninists. It was Faraj who arranged for a member of the PLO from Belgium to speak to the rallyists, almost all of whom were students. This demonstration was actively supported by not only the Arab and Iranian students, but the Indians, black South Africans and other Third World left-wing groups as well.

An annual rally, information booths on the campuses, the odd speaker or other attraction are the main methods used by the pro-Palestinians to get their message across. However, their influence on the English campuses has not been that great. The Communists, especially now in the more conservative '70s, are looked upon as a fringe group.

This year's all-day "internationalist" rally of the Marxist-Leninists took place April 30 at the CEGEP Maisonneuve. Communist parties from around the world were invited to this "historic" meeting but the Palestinian issue was not on the agenda.

The Marxist-Leninists' anti-Zionist stance is one of many "underdog" causes they have taken up. The danger lay in the fact that many of the foreign students have attached themselves to the Marxist-Leninists' anti-Zionism through an original interest in a cause more close to them. For instance, the Iranians joined the Marxist-Leninists when they took an anti-Shah position.

On the English campuses, there is also the Communist Party of Canada, but it represents a very small grouping with little support from any of the student body. The Young Socialists, another small organization, are politically inclined in an academic sense and support an independent Palestinian state, but do not consider themselves to be anti-Israel.

All of the Communist groups are quite secretive about their membership and sources of support.

Yaacov Diament, a student at the Sir George Williams campus of Concordia and co-ordinator of the Montreal Student Zionists, which is associated with the Canadian Zionist Federation and Hillel, has seen little well-organized anti-Zionist activity, he says.

One striking characteristic of the anti-Zionists, according to Diament, is their lack of knowledge of the facts. "You can enter into a civilized debate with these people, but you soon see they do not have a deep understanding of what is going on in the Middle East."

AQP poster distributed to universities.

Diament has also observed that students on the English campuses are not political, except perhaps when it comes to matters related to Quebec. "In the '60s, they were more vocal, now they are more interested in studying." At pro-Zionist activities, Diament said, he has never known any clashes with the anti-Zionists.

In some instances it has been found that those manning information booths on the campuses were not accredited students of the university. Mark Zuricki of the Sir George Hillel remembers an incident where a number of persons dispensing pro-Palestinian information were ordered off the campus because they were not students.

Although most anti-Zionists distinguish themselves from anti-Semites, Herb Weinstein, director of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation, questions the validity of this claim. "Whenever the Communists attack Canadian capitalists, usually two Jews are singled out."

Besides the obvious manifestations of anti-Zionism at the English universities, there seems to be no signs for any undue concern about a more subtle form of anti-Zionism, such as in the classroom. "There may be some anti-Zionism among professors but none have been controversial to my knowledge," said Weinstein.

If the difference between the mood of the English and French campuses could be summed up it is that the former are either neutral or low-key pro-Israel while at the French universities one tends to be either highly politicized — almost always to the left — or completely indifferent.

Even at that, Leon Benbaruk, regional director of information for the Canada-Israel Committee, estimates that out of 10 French university students, five have no interest in the Middle East, three are somewhat interested, and two are anti-Zionist.

"Because most political activists are leftists at the French universities most are pro-Palestinian . . . There is a contradiction in that now because China has openly supported the existence of Israel.

"A lot will depend on how things turn out in the Middle East," said Joe Piha, director of the Canadian Professors for Peace in the Middle East. There are also many more Arab professors at the French universities, which may have an effect on the students' politics.

The Universite de Montreal is not known for any well-orchestrated anti-Zionist movement. This could be because it is older and more "established" and therefore more lukewarm in any political matters. There is also a large number of Jewish professors and students at the U de M.

At the Universite de Quebec in Montreal, on the other hand, there are almost no Jewish students and only a couple of Jewish professors. The university campus is new, awaiting the completion of a permanent building, and considered radical in all its political activities.

Its strong anti-Israel attitude goes virtually unchecked because of the lack of input from Zionist groupings.

Anti-Zionist activities take much the same form at the French universities as at the English ones — speakers, information booths, cultural events organized mainly by the Communists and Arab students.

One exhibit a couple of weeks ago on Arabic culture at the U de M, sponsored by the Algerian students, included a poster proclaiming "Zionism is racism."

"The anti-Zionists are not very obvious . . . in fact, there are far more lectures on behalf of Israel than against," said one U de M professor who asked to remain anonymous. He pointed out that most Arab cultural events were not political, such as the joint Arab poetry seminar held by Concordia, McGill and the U de M some time ago. For the first time this year, the U de M offered a program in Arab studies.

At least one Jewish student at the U de M, Rafael Saloma, is disturbed by the lack of Zionist counter-information on the campus. "The community is doing nothing here," he said. At the time of writing, the Centre Hillel was without a director and the Montreal Student Zionists admitted they have made no major inroads at the U de M.

In Quebec City, Laval University held a lecture by Moroccan professor and journalist Benabdallah Abdel Kader, sponsored by the African club, on the parallel between Zionism and South African apartheid. Elsewhere, anti-Zionist groups are active at the CEGEPS, where younger students are more ideologically malleable. With the exception of the English CEGEPS, little Zionist presence has been possible at the many French CEGEPS.

Often behind pro-Palestinian manifestations on the French campuses are the Committee for Peace in the Middle East, a left-wing students' group; the Carrefour Internationale, a sort of conglomeration of foreign students which is headed this year by a Palestinian, or the Quebec Peace Council, a workers' as well as professors' and students' organization which is strongly anti-Zionist. Its membership includes Yvon Charbonneau, leader of the French teachers union, whose anti-Israel views are by now well-known.

UQAM, openly anti-Zionist both among students and professors, is frequently the site of anti-Zionist activity. A research seminar on the Mideast took place this past week at the University of Ottawa during the congress of the Association Canadienne-Francaise pour L'Avancement de Science, the French branch of the Learned Societies.

United Church lays complaint

When asked if the United Church had publicly concerned itself with anti-Zionist or anti-Semitic articles on campus, he said none had been raised to his attention prior to the Masada complaint.

He claimed there had been a "history of misunderstanding between the (Jewish) community and Al Forrest," and that his own concern about the article was not based on political sensitivities but inter-religious accord.

"Jews now in North America," the Observer editorial read, "won't tolerate such attacks any longer for which we may all be grateful. How ironic it is then, to find Zionists circulating this."

In informing the Masada editors of the United Church complaint, OHRC human rights officer Mark Krakowski wrote: "We do not suggest that the right of freedom of expression of opinion on highly politically sensitive issues, that result in diverse strong views, should be curtailed. We are concerned, however, about the serious community implication of the perception that published material, which is seen to foster racial and religious intolerance and hatred, is allowed to be widely circulated despite public policy and legislation to the contrary."

Clarfield replied to the commission that "this whole issue has been brought up by the United Church Observer, a magazine long infamous for its anti-Zionist and anti-Israel biases as part of a political struggle. They do not like when the Zionists on campus fight back against the tirade of leftist and Arab propaganda. As a result we believe that they would like to stop Masada no matter what we print."

Special show

TORONTO — In conjunction with Israel's 30th anniversary, Canadian television and radio networks are broadcasting special programs on a spectrum of cultural, scientific and political issues.

The CBC Radio network plans to devote part of its current affairs program, Sunday Morning to the topic of Israel. A selection of interviews with Israeli figures will be aired May 21, sometime during the course of the three-hour program which begins at 9.

Global TV plans a scientific salute to Israel on its half-hour program What Will They Think Of Next. A compilation of items on scientific advances, the show is produced by Michael Spivak and will be aired June 4, at 9:30 p.m.

Trudeau's address praising Israel draws ovation

Ben Milner, national president of Herut Hatzoar, said Trudeau's speech was "the most understanding of the Jewish peoples cause and history that I have heard any other modern world leader make. It was not a strong endorsement of Israel, but it was excellent."

The pageant itself reached numerous high points, especially in performances by Les Ballets Modernes du Quebec and the presence of scores of Jewish day school students. The dance arrangements, by Montreal choreographer Huge de Pot, utilized a script by McGill Prof. Shimon Levy to depict a series of mimed vignettes from Jewish history.

Reaction from audience members at intermission indicated that the segments dealing with Czarist Russia and the Holocaust were inappropriate in tone to the nature of the evening's celebrations. The dancers, however, remained the most popular part of the 30th anniversary tribute to Israel.

Outfitted in blue and white and bearing Israeli flags, they, at times, filled the entire performance area in a rush of swirling circles. A highly-moving part of the program began with the recorded voice of David Ben-Gurion reading the opening words of Israel's Declaration of Independence and was followed by a major production number with theme music from Exodus.

A solemn memorial ceremony for Israel's war dead was led by Rabbi Sidney Shoham and Cantor Solomon Gisser. Later, as singer Jo Amar performed a series of rousing Israeli songs, audience members spontaneously spilled onto the stage area to begin dancing the hora.

A stirring version of Jerusalem of Gold led by Roger Doucet, the familiar voice at Forum hockey games, concluded the evening's festivities.

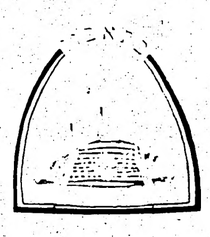
'Fruits' of Arab labor fed Jerusalem



bon appetit

By MARCIA KRETZMER

JERUSALEM —

"Every day at 12:30 they used to come — as regular as clocks — with their hand-drawn carts, bringing vegetables and fruit from Hebron and Bethlehem. That was before 1948, of course. They used to go through the wealthy districts first — the German Colony, where the aristocracy of the Arab and Jewish families had their villas, and also Rehavia.

"Our area, Menora, was 'amcha,' unpretentious — but even there the vendors used to call out all the names of the families, and we'd come down and make our purchases."

Tzippora, a fourth-generation Jerusalemite, needed little encouragement to dip into her stock of memories from the War of Independence and before; when she was still a child.

"I remember it as if it were yesterday," Tzippora declared. "We also used to buy eggs from them, a kind of honey made from carob syrup, tahina, a very good soap we called 'Nablus' because it was made there. And milk, leben, and butter — I've never tasted such butter. It was sold in camel-skin bags. We also bought huge drums of oil. My father used to taste it, then bargain over the price with the vendors."

But the main item bought by Tzippora's family were fresh fruits and vegetables. There was very little Jewish agriculture at the time. What the kibbutzim grew sufficed for their own needs.

"In the towns we were dependent on Arab-grown produce," explained Tzippora. "We had most of the fruits and vegetables available today — cabbage, cauliflower, beans, tomatoes, peaches, bananas — you name it. All bought from Arabs.

"So when the '48 war broke out, quite apart from the blockade on convoys to Jerusalem, we were cut off from our usual source of supply for fresh fruits and vegetables. That's when they began announcing over the radio that hubeiza could be used much like cabbage or spinach."

Hubeiza, called helmit in Hebrew, is one of the mallows. It has turned into something of a legend in Israel, ever since it was used to supplement the meagre diet of the beseiged Jerusalemites in 1948.

Hubeiza is easily recognizable growing profusely in the fields, valleys and along roadsides in springtime, with its striped, pale mauve flowers, and vine-like leaves.

The plant takes its Arabic name hubeiza, a diminutive for bread, from its small, bread-like fruit, long a childhood favorite, eaten raw.

The leaves, whose taste and texture resemble spinach, were used stuffed like vine-leaves, cut raw into salads, chopped and made into fritters or fillings for pies, or in soups.

For many years hubeiza was prepared each Independence Day as a symbolic reminder of the siege of Jerusalem, but this popular custom is dying out. Now, with greater ease of transportation than before, Israelis use this holiday to get out into the open spaces. And the emphasis is more on picnics and cookouts, than home-prepared dishes.

Probably the most popular open-air treat, this year, as on other years, was kebabs, made from a variety of organ meats, steak, and chopped meat. Try the mixture I give below, or compose your own.

Kebabs

2 lbs ground beef, mixed with 1 large onion, finely chopped, 2 tblsps parsley, finely chopped, salt and pepper small chicken livers
lb heart, cubed
kidneys
1½ lbs steak, cubed
2 lb tiny onions
green peppers
cup of mixed oil, lemon juice, salt and freshly-ground pepper for basting

1. have your charcoal grill ready. Alternate organ meats, steak cubes, ground beef balls, pieces of green pepper and onions on to skewers. Brush over well with basting mixture
2. cook on all sides till browned and crusty, basting intermittently
3. serve with pitta, mixed vegetable salad, or eggplant salad

Soviets haunted by assimilation

By BARB SILVERMAN

TORONTO —

To be a Jew in the Soviet Union in 50 years time will have no meaning whatsoever, predicts Genya Intrator, vice-chairman of the Canadian Committee for Soviet Jewry.

"Their passports will say they are a Jew, but there will be no more Jews in our sense of the word," she told a group of 40 at a meeting organized by her group at Adath Israel.

Painting a bleak picture of the future of Soviet Jews, she said there will be no holocaust there, but warned of the spectre of assimilation.

Mrs. Intrator outlined the history of anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union, saying that Judaism is the target of an especially "vicious propaganda campaign in Russia." She said that Judaism is sharply attacked, not so much because it is a religion, but because of its effect in unifying Jews.

She declared that Jews in Russia have been accepted as plotters, and cast in habitual roles as scapegoats, upon whom the Soviets can blame the failures and difficulties of their internal and foreign policies.

Mrs. Intrator said that in the Soviet Union "Jews are considered cosmopolitan, international Zionists conspiring with international Zionist mafia to threaten their socialist fatherland."

She pointed out Jews suffer restrictions on residence, employment and education. "Jews used to have synagogues to nurture the feeling of belonging in the Soviet Union, but now they are government-supervised.

There is a never-ending flow of anti-Jewish and anti-Semitic propaganda being imported from the West while the Soviets display their anti-Semitic feelings on prime time television, she continued.

The two other speakers at the Soviet Jewry meeting were Liberal MP for York Centre, Robert Kaplan, and Max Shecter, national chairman of the Canadian Committee for Soviet Jewry.

Kaplan spoke on the position of the Canadian government on the Helsinki Review at Belgrade. He specifically mentioned the agreement to add a human rights dimension to the act. He said Canadians should be proud that their determination made the Helsinki Review possible at Belgrade.

sparks from the torah

by RABBI MEIR GOTTESMAN

Parshat Emor/Lag b'Omer (Thursday)
Kee kadosh hu l'Ailokav...For he is holy unto his G-d.

It's an honor to be a kohain or a scholar — but you have to be worthy of the honor.

To a certain Galician rebbe streamed hundreds of Chassidim with kvitlech, request notes that the rabbi pray for them. One of his beseechers was a woman who caught the rabbi's fancy. The rabbi was a widower, and he sent his shammas to encourage the woman to divorce her husband. Later he married her.

The scandal kept Galicia humming for months.

When the Lemberger Rav heard of the matter, he remarked: "Now I understand why it says that kohain is not allowed to marry a divorced woman. In those days, many women came to the kohanim to offer their sacrifices in the Temple, and to prevent similar 'hanky panky', the Torah placed a ban on kohanim marrying a divorced woman."

There are many things in the Torah that are glatt kosher, but still wrong for an adam chashuv, a respected person to do. The Almighty commanded: "V'nikdashti btoch bnai Yisrael...that I be sanctified among the children of Israel."

The first priority of a religious leader is not to impress Gentiles, but Jews. He must act in such a way that it brings honor, love and respect for Torah and G-d.

Religion is not a business.

* * * *

It was tough to be a kohain gadol, a high priest.

The Almighty warned: "He shall not go near any dead body, nor defile himself for his father and mother."

Imagine...if a high priest's parents died, he couldn't attend their funeral! Where was the yosher? Here they raised him, and this is the way he pays them respect?

But it shows — once he became high priest, he didn't belong to his family alone anymore. To be a true priest to the people, everyone had to become his own family. What right did he have to defile himself for his physical parents, more than for any other Jew?

They once ran into the study of a tzadik with the news that his young son had been hurt, but that thank G-d, the doctors said he would recover. When the saint heard that, he began crying.

"Why do you cry?" they asked, "the doctor said it would be all right."

"A woman came in a few minutes ago that I should pray for her sick son," he answered. "It hurts me that I did not feel the same pain when she told me about the sickness of her son as when you told me about my own."

Every Jew has to be a high priest of hergesh, sensitivity to others. We have to realize that all around us there is much suffering, financial, physical, emotional, and we should not sleep too soundly knowing there is a world out there that needs our help.

* * * *

For a priest to be a kohain gadol, he had to have five things: beauty, strength, wealth, wisdom and years. (Tanchuma)

Beauty? Not that he looked like a movie star, but that his neshama was beautiful, undistorted by sin and selfishness;

Strength? Not to lift weights, but the inner strength to stick to principles despite what the mob wanted;

Wealth? How much is wealth? A million? Two million? He was satisfied with whatever he had, so that he would not sell away Yiddishkeit for a few bucks;

Wisdom? What wisdom? Torah. Because without Torah even the most sincere person can destroy a nation;

Years? Because after all, nothing refines, tempers and humbles like life...beautiful, difficult life.

Shabbat Shalom.

World famous hairdresser Vidal Sassoon [right] was in Toronto recently to attend Israel Bonds function hosted by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Kleinstein [left]. Looking on are Paul Orenstein [centre] and Morris Saffer. Sassoon is involved in Los Angeles Bonds activity.

The Diaspora is praised by entrepreneur Sassoon, Bonds chairman in LA

TORONTO —

Vidal Sassoon, beauty salons entrepreneur and author of the bestselling A Year of Beauty and Health told the new leadership division of Toronto Israel Bonds that Diaspora Jewry is one of the best assets that Israel has.

"It is through our efforts on her behalf that Israel has so many friends in the international scene," he said. Sassoon, chairman of the Los Angeles new leadership division, spoke at a cocktail reception last week at the home of Arthur Kleinstein.

Speaking eloquently of his experiences in Israel as a member of the Palmach, the striking arm of the Haganah during the War of Independence in 1948, he said that North American Jewry must never grow complacent as did European Jews prior to World War II.

He reminded the audience that even while Jews were being led into the crematoria, they were unable to grasp the horror of the events that were happening.

Sassoon was born 50 years ago in the east end of London. He described how he spent his early years fighting gangs of British fascists during the '30s and '40s. This, he said, left an indelible impression on him and has led to his life-long commitment to Israel and Zionism.

The co-chairmen of Toronto new leadership are Morris Saffer and Paul Orenstein.

Six students in Toronto are honored as winners of the Gasner scholarships

TORONTO —

Six Toronto students have been named as winners of Meyer W. Gasner Memorial Scholarship Fund awards. The fund assists students planning careers in Jewish education.

The six students are: Mimy Assayag, Pearl Brenman, Edward Fram, Asher I. Frankel, Sorel Goldberg-Loeb and Miriam Tward. The students were awarded a total of $5,000. The scholarship fund is chaired by Samuel J. Sable, member of the Board of Jewish Education, and administered by BJE.

Edward Fram, 20, attended the Beth Tikvah Congregational School and the Toronto Midrasha L'Morim, before undertaking studies at the Beit Midrash Letorah in Jerusalem for two years. He will continue his learning at Yeshiva University, where he is currently enrolled as an undergraduate.

Asher I. Frankel, 25, who studied at Eitz Chaim, and the Ner Israel Yeshiva College, is an alumnus of the Community Hebrew Academy. He has studied at Yeshiva University and Harvard, and obtained a BA degree from the University of Toronto in 1974. He is planning graduate studies at Yeshiva.

Sorel Goldberg-Loeb, 23, studied at the United Synagogue Day School and the Independent Jewish Day High School. She holds a BA from the University of Toronto, with a major in Judaic studies, and has studied at the Hebrew University and UCLA. She is currently enrolled at the University of Judaism in Los Angeles in a program leading to the degree of master of arts in teaching.

Miriam Tward, 18, a graduate of the Eitz Chaim School and the Beth Jacob High School for Girls, is planning to pursue her studies at the Midrasha Institute in Jerusalem.

Meyer W. Gasner, who died in 1974, was president of the United Jewish Welfare Fund, the Mizrachi Organization of Canada, the Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue, and the Canadian Jewish Congress, Central Region.

Acting company, community centre plan joint venture

By MOURA WOLPERT

HAMILTON —

Presentation by the Jewish Community Centre of the Hamilton Actor's Lab highly-praised production of David Rosenfield's Hasid, on three successive evenings next week, may well be the first of a number of co-operative ventures between the two organizations.

"There's no telling what it can turn into," says cantor Samuel Berman, who took over as JCC director of cultural arts earlier this year following the resignation of Helen Minden.

"Actor's Lab is a resident company. They have a novel approach to theatre that is not really avant garde but the presentation of material that is not commercial. They are looking for a home...we are developing a home.."

The newly-developed relationship between Actor's Lab and the JCC dates back to the original production of Hasid late last year, when a number of members of the Jewish community, including Samuel Soifer, executive director of the Hamilton Jewish Federation, and Paul Hanover of CHML, wrote complimentary letters to the group after seeing the play.

Putting the plays on at the JCC "is one aspect of a pilot project to introduce our work and our ensemble to the community," says Julia von Flotow, who is responsible for publicity and who, like everyone else in the company, does a bit of everything.

There are all sorts of possibilities for co-operation quite apart from theatrical productions and one idea is to introduce the company as a resource centre involving children. In fact, Ms. von Flotow is currently engaged in working out a "two-day intensive creative recreation workshop involving sports, dancing, movement and so on" for Camp Kadimah during the summer.

More definite, however, is a "poet's evening" on Tuesday, May 24, with Rosenfield reading his poetry at the studio of photographer Gerry Laarakker in Hess Village.

The two plays will be presented at the JCC, 57 Delaware Ave., on Sunday May 21, at 2:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m.; at Beth Jacob Congregation, 375 Aberdeen Ave. on Monday, May 22, 8:30 p.m., and at Adas Israel synagogue, 125 Cline Ave. S., on Tuesday, May 23, 8:30 p.m.

Tickets, at $3 per person, can be obtained by calling 529-4715, or at the door.

Capacity crowd of 4,000 fills shul to celebrate Israel's birthday

By JEFF BIEN

TORONTO — A capacity crowd of about 4,000 packed Beth Tzedec Synagogue to celebrate three decades of Israeli independence. Men, women and children of all ages attended the birthday party, sponsored by the Canadian Zionist Federation, Central Region.

An impressive lineup of guests spoke: Israel Ambassador to Canada Mordechai Shalev; Ontario Consumer Affairs Minister Larry Grossman; Judge Philip Givens, CZF president, and Simcha Jacobovici, head of the North American Jewish Students' Network.

In the banquet hall, 20 booths covering every conceivable type of Israeli produce attracted a large audience. Falafel stands, toys and trinkets enchanted young and old alike as they awaited the beginning of the Independence Day formalities.

Earlier in the evening, Matti Golan, the acting consul general of Israel in Toronto, delivered a brief message at the Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue commemorating Israel's fallen soldiers. Golan called upon world Jewry to unite in support of Israel and to remember well the sacrifices of Jews so that they will not have been in vain.

The Independence Day program at Beth Tzedec began with a brief introduction of guests by Max Goody, chairman of the proceedings. The air was alive with excitement as a color guard began assembling at the back of the sanctuary and Cantor Joseph Cooper led the assembly in the singing of O Canada.

On the sound of a drum roll the flag and torch procession began to make its way towards the front of the synagogue. It was a spectacular sight. Israeli and Canadian flags encompassed the bima as a candlelighting ceremony took place under the direction of Valerie Sloman.

Each candle was dedicated, seven in all: the first for Zionist groups, the second for women's groups, the third for Jewish oppressed lands, the fourth for Jewish youth, the fifth for aliya, the sixth for Jewish martyrs and the seventh for Israel itself.

Rabbi Benjamin Friedberg of Beth Tzedec recited a prayer for the state of Israel. That was followed by a visual recreation of Israel's inception as a state culminating in a presentation, by Irving Siegel, of the declaration of the state of Israel. Chaim Weizmann filled the screen and tears filled many an eye when the assembly stood to sing Hatikva, the Israeli national anthem.

Ambassador Shalev was introduced by Lewis J. E. Moses, president CZF, Central Region. The ambassador expressed his appreciation, on behalf of the government and people of Israel, for the "demonstration of solidarity with Israel and for those expressions of profound sympathy and support for Israel."

Commenting upon the Syrian Jewry issue, he said, "there is still a remnant of Syrian Jewry who are deprived of their rights to emigrate to Israel and we shall not forget them either as we have not forgotten a single tribe."

Concerning recent peace initiatives, the ambassador contended that "Israel encouraged the president of Egypt to visit Jerusalem and so far it has been only Israel that has made generous proposals for a peace settlement."

Grossman, representing the government of Ontario, pledged his allegiance to the "Promised Land", noting that Jews are living in an increasingly secular world.

"A strong Israel is the condition of our survival as a people," he asserted.

Attending his 30th birthday celebration was Philip Givens, who in a forceful address, said that he believed things are much better for the Jew than ever before.

"We have a proud and powerful state, we have statesmen that the world reckons with and respects even though the may be in disagreement with them, we have our dignity and sense of honor and nobody pushes us around."

Simcha Jacobovici noted that "although the occasion should be a time of celebration, it should also be one of re-evaluation and awakening."

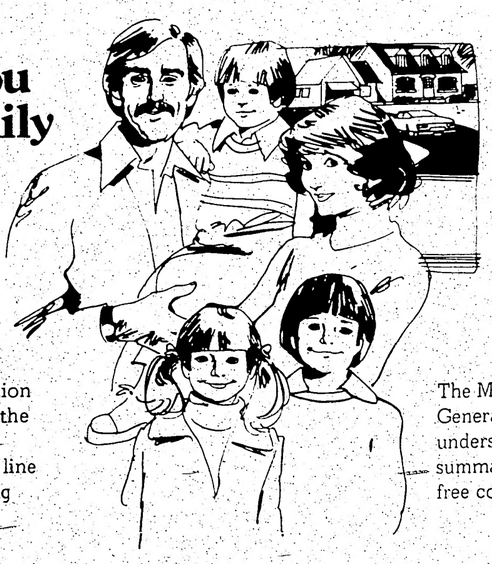
He declared that youth is not merely a chronological phenomenon and that it is readily seen in "those who act, those who shout, those who fight Nazis in Skokie, St. Louis, Chicago, Toronto, wherever they arrive, to stamp them out wherever they grow."

The program ended with Geula Gill, "Israel's ambassadress of song."

Although it was late in the evening there was still a sizeable crowd in the sanctuary who seemed to be enjoying the entertainment. Upstairs there was dancing with the Sh'ma Yisroel Band.

Ontario has reformed its family laws.

We think you and your family should know about them.



The purpose of the new legislation is to strengthen and encourage the role of the family by bringing outmoded and unfair laws into line with modern family life. Among the subjects covered are:

- Matrimonial property – the sharing of family assets, including the family home.
- Support – the mutual obligation of spouses to support themselves and their children.
- Domestic contracts – what they are and how to make them.
- Abolition of the status of illegitimacy – equal rights for all children.
- Marriages – age of consent and civil ceremonies.
- Succession rights – the rules for making wills and rights of surviving family members.

The new laws substantially change the rights and responsibilities of every person in Ontario.

The Ministry of the Attorney General has prepared an easy-to-understand pamphlet which summarizes the new law. For your free copy, write to:

All set for the big Walk for Israel on May 28 are team captains representing the professions. Back row left to right are: Paul Schrieder, Harvey Shaul and Stan Salsberg. Front row: Rick Rodney, Carl Goldenberg and Izzy Snyder. This year's Walk for Israel has sparked interest from youth groups, it's said.

This year's walkathon will feature competitions

TORONTO —

What's new in the annual UJA walkathon scheduled for Sunday, May 28? Good old-fashioned competition, that's what.

Schools, men's and women's organizations, youth groups, synagogue brotherhoods and groups representing six professions (doctors, dentists, lawyers, accountants, optometrists and pharmacists), will be competing for challenge cups to be awarded for the total number of kilometers walked and amount of money raised.

David Bloom, chairman of the Walk for Israel event, and spearhead behind the working committees, has been in touch with all his chairmen on a regular basis and reports "the response to date from would-be participants has been phenomenal."

Ron Seigel, co-ordinator of the B'nai B'rith runathon which begins at 8 a.m., suggests that all runners train properly and consult their doctors before participating. "We want to be certain that everyone who takes part in the run is physically able to do so."

Stan Rose who is in charge of school participation, says: "The kids are really excited at the prospect of meeting sports and show biz celebrities along the route. We are asking students to assemble under their school banners at the start-off checkpoint at 8:30 a.m. for the opening ceremonies."

"Response has been overwhelming from doctors, lawyers, dentists, optometrists, accountants and pharmacists," says professional group chairman Rick Rodney. "They are all eager to compete for top dollars raised."

This year's Walk for Israel has sparked renewed interest from students, reports Steve Polevoy, youth group chairman. "B'nai B'rith youth are planning internal competitions between their own chapters, and response from the schools has been terrific," he says. "We should have a very large representation of youngsters and teenagers this year."

Molly Bloom, who's been responsible for recruiting participation from women's organizations, says that she has been encouraging members to walk with their children as a family unit.

Any participants who cannot arrive at Earl Bales Park before 9:30 a.m. are being asked to start at a later checkpoint.

Jewish Historical Society will meet in London, Ont.

TORONTO —

For the third consecutive year, the Jewish Historical Society of Canada will be meeting with the Learned Societies. This year's event takes place May 28-30 at the University of Western Ontario in London, Ont.

Festivities get underway on the 20th at the Jewish Community Centre with "A Historical Interaction with the London Community." It will be led by Alec Richmond.

The following day, at University College, Victor Sefton society president, will present a paper on "The European Holocaust 1939-45 — Who Knew What and When — A Canadian Aspect". Reactions will be given by David Rome, national archivist of Canadian Jewish Congress.

In the afternoon, also at University College, there will be a symposium on writings of Canadian Jewish history. There will be presentations by Ben Kayfetz and Stephen Speisman of Canadian Jewish Congress, Prof. Gerald Tulchinsky of Queen's University and Rabbi Harvey Meirovitch of Oshawa.

On the 30th, in the morning, the general meeting of the society takes place along with a presentation by Izzie Wolch of the Jewish Historical Society of Western Canada.

Doctoral student Paula Draper of the University of Toronto will present a paper in the afternoon, entitled "Canada and the Interned Jewish Refugees in World War II". It deals with camp life and the struggle for immigrant status.

All presentations are open to the public.

Plan meeting on early education

TORONTO —

A conference to discuss early childhood education in Jewish schools in Ontario will be held at the Finch Avenue branch of Associated Hebrew Schools, Monday, May 29, under the auspices of the department of education and culture of Canadian Jewish Congress, Central Region. Theme of the conference is "The Jewish Family in Changing Times."

Sam Filer, CJC regional chairman, said that visits by Congress officials to the various schools in Ontario communities have made it apparent that "there is a need for nursery school teachers and their assistants to get together with their colleagues to share information and discuss mutual problems and approaches for the betterment of this very important segment of Jewish education."

Filer said the idea for a conference — the first of its type to be held — came from Doris Bronstein, a nursery school teacher of the Ottawa Hillel Academy, who pointed out that "we are isolated from the mainstream of Jewish education and we could benefit greatly from a get-together of colleagues who are doing similar work." Mrs. Bronstein is the conference chairman.

Rabbi Akiva Egozi and Ruth Kurtz, of Associated, agreed to host the conference and helped develop the program, which will run from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

Mrs. Kurtz, Mrs. Bronstein and Leah Block, of London, Ont., will conduct workshops. Ruth Borchiver, supervisor of the Educational Counselling Centre of the Jewish Vocational Service, will be guest speaker at the luncheon session.

Conference co-ordinator is Edmond Y. Lipsitz, director of education of the CJC central region. Morton M. Bernholtz, of Windsor, is chairman of the education and cultural committee.

Shuls combine in extravaganza

TORONTO —

Three North York synagogues have combined their resources and will present a concert on May 25, 8:15 p.m., to be held in the Beth Emeth-Bais Yehuda Synagogue sanctuary.

In celebration of Israel's 30th anniversary, Adath Israel, Beth David B'nai Israel Beth Am and Beth Emeth-Bais Yehuda synagogues will co-sponsor a concert which will feature an evening of Israeli, Yiddish, Chassidic, liturgical, orchestral, choral and solo works.

Featured will be the 100-piece Festival Symphony Orchestra and the Toronto Concert Singers. Soloists will be Cantors Mysha Alexandrovich, Louis Danto and A. Eliezer Kirshblum. The presentation of this program has been made possible by a Wintario grant.

The evening will also feature orchestral works by Rick Kardonne and Milton Barnes. Paul Hofferl, conductor of the orchestra, is the recipient of the 1977 Canadian Film Award for the best feature film music score.

Wasting electricity is a hot issue.
Appliances that heat things up can use a lot of electricity. Here are some tips on how to cut down.
Watch out for the elements. Choose the element that best fits the pan. A lid on the pan also keeps heat from escaping.
Load it in your favour. Wait until you have a full load before you wash. And remember, much of your laundry will get just as clean in cold water. Afterwards, hang your clothes outdoors to dry.
Give your dishes the air. You'll save electricity with your dishwasher if you cancel the final dry cycle. Just open the door and let your dishes air dry.
Electricity down the drain. A dripping hot tap can waste 175 gallons of hot water a month. A new tap washer costs only a few pennies.
Don't join the tub club. A shower usually takes less hot water than a bath.
Don't sneak a peek. Don't open the oven door unless you have to. And don't use an oven full of heat for one small item.

Rabbi Abba Silver's contribution

Unstinting support for Zionist state

landmark events in our history

By ROCHELLE CARR

It was May of 1942, and America's involvement in World War II was total. For America's Jews, there was a dilemma — to be or not to be a Zionist. During that most trying time in American Zionist history, one name stood out as a champion of the cause for a Jewish state — Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver.

His interest in Zionism began almost from the day he was born in Lithuania in 1893. A voracious reader who, in his older years became a prolific writer, he devoured books about his people, particularly those which dealt with a Jewish homeland.

The fact that his father was a Hebrew teacher helped make him one of the earliest Zionists fluent in the recently modernized language.

In 1920, his family joined the trek westward and the nine-year-old boy found himself surrounded by thousands of his co-religionists in New York City's Lower East Side. In a short time, he helped found a group devoted to speaking Hebrew, the Herzl Zion Club, out of which emerged some of American Jewry's leading citizens.

His penchant for scholarship drew him to the rabbinate. In 1915 he was ordained as a Reform rabbi at Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati. After a short stint at a pulpit in West Virginia, he became, at the age of 24, rabbi of Cleveland's Tifereth Israel with which he was associated until his death in 1963.

Quickly, the tall, lean Silver gained a reputation for backing liberal causes, for erudition, as seen through his numerous books and articles, and for being one of American Jewry's foremost orators. At one point, he was president of the Central Conference of American Rabbis.

At the same time, he had a marked impact on American Zionism.

His ties with the Zionist movement, however, were not always of a harmonious nature. Even before the war, when he tried to warn American Jewry about the impending Holocaust and the need for a Jewish homeland to save Europe's Jews, his words were often not heeded or, more likely, their effect was watered-down as a result of internal bickerings within the Zionist ranks.

Nevertheless, he worked unstintingly to try to get both U.S. parties to adopt a pro-Jewish state stance. On May 8, 1947, in his capacity as leader of the American section of the Jewish Agency, he presented the same plea before the United Nations' General Assembly.

Historians generally agree that his talks before the Assembly and the Security Council were a factor in helping to bring about the UN partition of Palestine resolution on Nov. 29, 1947.

The distinguished rabbi, who combined both the Herzlian political approach and Ahad Ha'am's cultural emphasis, rightfully earned his place in the pages of modern Jewish history as one of the architects of the Jewish state.

Ben Mayer, director of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation, is leaving his post after seven years service to take up a teaching position at Yeshiva University's Wurzweiler School of Social Work.

The 35-year-old Cleveland native, a graduate himself of Wurzweiler, directed the Hillel operation at the University of Toronto campus. "Hillel was a very good experience," he said in a telephone interview, "but for a limited period of time. I've climbed all the mountains I can climb or want to visualize and I'd like to think I could continue to grow rather than atrophying."

He, his wife and three children will likely move to New York City in August where he will be one of five faculty members in the Wurzweiler School's block program. His duties will include teaching group work, community organization and Jewish social philosophy, as well as supervising students in practical work in Jewish community organizations.

Mayer is leaving in what he called a "transitional year for Hillel." The foundation lost its St. George building in a January fire and has yet to relocate.

Formerly a staffer with the B'nai B'rith Youth Organization here, he said Hillel "should take advantage of the hiatus to shift gears." The foundation, he explained, should experiment with the idea of moving away from "the elite campus" to serve a wider group of young people, as well, without duplicating programs already in existence in the community.

"To an extent Hillel is batting its head against the wall, at least now, in the past couple of years, and for some time to come, based on the economic psychology of the times. It renders a picture of a typical student who has damn little time for anything, even for blood and guts causes."

Jewish programing, he said, is "fated for defeat" if it has to entice away the student with little time on his hands to sell him something he doesnt want to have."

The foundation is seeking a replacement for Mayer. The campus has approximately 3,000 Jewish students in a total population of 55,000.

17 Romanian medical centres service sick, lonely, elderly remnant of Jewry

By MOURA WOLPERT

BUCHAREST — Dr. Arthur Maiersohn has been director of the Bucharest socio-medical centre for about seven or eight years and he describes it as an emergency clinic for the elderly.

What it is, in fact, is a place where sick and lonely old Jews can come for a little tender, loving care and medical attention; where they feel at home and comfortable in a Jewish atmosphere and where they are understood if they want to speak Yiddish.

What began with one retired doctor taking care of the elderly sick in Bucharest has grown into a network of 17 medical centres throughout Romania, staffed by 30 doctors, all retired, nurses and a few social workers, and supported by the American Joint Distribution Committee (JDC).

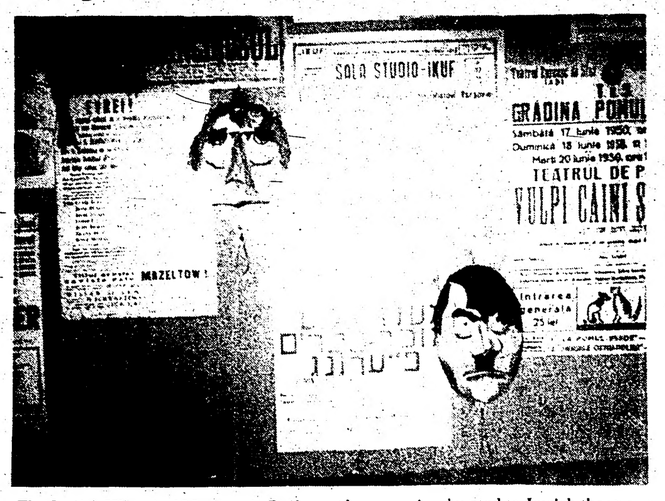
"Our total caseload," says Moses Levine, the Geneva-based JDC representative who is responsible for Romania, "is about 75,000 people."

The centre cares for over 3,000 people, and Dr. Maiersohn has a staff of seven doctors, including a general practitioner, specialists, and two dentists. And one of the country's most outstanding cardiologists, now retired, can be found at one of the provincial centres.

The equipment at the centre is outdated and worn, and although JDC will supply whatever is needed, it will not provide anything that will duplicate services available free in state hospitals. Drugs, on the other hand, are not free and these JDC supplies to the needy.

JDC moved into Romania immediately after World War II with a huge relief program for the 400,000 survivors of the Holocaust. But in 1948, when the country became a socialist republic and part of the eastern bloc, JDC was thrown out as an "imperialist espionage agency." For the next 19 years, there was virtually no contact between the Romanian Jewish community and the West. But in 1967, under its new policy of national independence, Romania allowed the Joint to return and begin a modest welfare program in co-operation with the Federation of Jewish communities, headed by Chief Rabbi Moses Rosen.

"We came in March 1967, after two years of negotiations with the government," Levine says. "We came overnight, without money, and Charles Jordan, the late director of JDC, asked 'what shall we do?' They sat down with Rabbi Rosen and worked out a program.



The Jewish Historical Museum in Bucharest has a section devoted to Jewish theatre.

From that modest beginning 11 years ago, when JDC could do little more than organize food packages and distribute a pension of 100 lei per month to the needy, there has evolved a full social assistance program, supervised by Levine, who spends two weeks out of every month in Romania.

Joint contributes about $3 million to the program ($50,000 comes from Canada) and the Romanian community provides another $250,000. Levine is careful to note that JDC takes no part whatever in religious or cultural work and all expenses related to the synagogues, religious schools, upkeep of cemeteries and salaries of religious personnel are carried entirely by the federation.

The bulk of the 10,000 Jews receiving assistance are the remnant of survivors of Auschwitz, Mardanek and other camps, those whose health was destroyed and who have lost their families. One of the main criteria, in fact, for getting into a nursing home is to be alone and not to have any family, and exceptions, Levine says, are rare.

The Negru Voda Nursing Home in Bucharest, one of seven in the country, opened about seven years ago with five beds. Today, there are 80 patients, and if the place seems bare and almost spartan in its simplicity, it is clean, well kept and the patients are well looked after. Altogether, there are 200 beds throughout the country but at least 600 are needed.

"Our prediction was that our responsibility would go down due to emigration and deaths," Levine explains, "but it hasn't worked out that way. The paradox is that we are helping them to live longer and more and more institutional care will be needed as time goes on."

By far the most important part of the program is the monthly cash assistance received by about 4,300 persons. A minimum of 800 lei is required for a person to live in reasonable dignity and JDC supplements government pensions up to that amount or, if necessary, pays the full amount and, in some cases, more. No Jew in Romania, Rabbi Rosen emphasizes, is forced to live on less than 800 lei per month.

The emphasis throughout the program is on dignity, not handouts, and "although we have our disputes," Levine remarks, "we have never disagreed on this basic fundamental of doing things with dignity."

In addition to the pension, about 10,000 people receive food packages six times a year, before each Jewish holiday. The parcels contain basic foodstuffs – rice, pasta, canned vegetables, sugar, oil, sardines — which are purchased from the government at a special rate of $9-$10 per package. For Pesach, additional eggs are included as well as matzo from Israel.

About 8,000 people receive clothing coupons, enabling them to outfit themselves at the federation clothing store with whatever they need, including such household items as blankets. Here, too, the emphasis is on dignity, as recipients can select whatever they need and in whatever styles or colors they desire. The clothes are new and, like the food purchased from the government at a special rate, "And for the provinces," Levine adds, "there is a Sears-Roebuck mail order operation."

The kosher canteen at the Jewish community centre in Bucharest is one of 11 in the country, a large dining room filled mostly with old people but here and there one can see a few young men and women.

Over 1,000 people per day eat at the Bucharest restaurant alone and throughout the country over 2,500 are served daily. In addition, a full program of meals-on-wheels takes care of those confined to their homes.

Parents of diabetic son organize to fight disease

By LOUISE CORNBLUM

TORONTO —

Allan and Helaine Shiff are parents of 14-year-old Lorne, who developed juvenile diabetes at the age of 7. They are determined that Toronto will at last do its part in the search for a cure for this disease which affects 5% of the population.

Until about five years ago, there was virtually no research being conducted into a cure for juvenile diabetes — which can strike at any age and is the most severe form of the disease. Within 12 years, 50% begin to suffer such complications as blindness, kidney disease, arteriosclerosis.

Always, the first reaction of such parents has been to ask, "But what is being done to find a cure?" Until recently, the answer was, "nothing".

Now, all over North America, parents like the Shiffs are organizing to fight the disease the only way they can — by raising funds for research.

In Montreal, a branch of the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation was founded in 1974. It was affiliated with the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation parent organization which was formed in Boston in 1970. During the past three years, Montreal members have raised $500,000, all funnelled into research projects, many in Canada.

It is the intention of the Shiff family that Toronto will undertake its full share in what is, for every diabetic, a race against time. For the past six months, the Shiffs have been on the phone constantly, setting up a Toronto branch.

Shiff, who is president of several of his own companies which are involved in the construction industry, is making many sacrifices of time which he needs for his business interests and has given up all of his volunteer work in the Toronto Jewish community.

It is his wife, however, who has radically altered her life for the sake of her son and others like him.

She is business manager for the Canada Works and Federal Grant Project. At the end of this month, she will leave the post to become the volunteer office manager for the Toronto Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation.

The purpose of the JDRF is to fund research for improved treatment, arresting the devastating complications of the disease, and ultimately finding the cause and a cure. Once funds are collected, members work just as diligently to ensure the disbursement of those funds to top priority research.

This year, the foundation has funded 44 research grants and 12 fellowships. Recipients are selected by a medical science advisory board composed of personnel involved in the treatment of diabetes. Their decisions are double checked by a research review committee composed of JDRF members who are diabetics, or parents of diabetics themselves.

Toronto has never, in the past, been part of this fund-raising effort, despite the fact that the largest grants of Canadian-raised funds have been given to research projects at several Toronto hospitals.

The Shiffs have now assembled a nucleus of 30 committee members and plans for fund-raising are underway, including a raffle for a Rolls Royce automobile, which will be held in November.

Memorial issue depicts unique children's mural

By CHAIM YEHUDA

On April 23, Israel released three new issues: a set of five stamps honoring prominent figures in Israel's modern history, a souvenir sheet for the National Stamp Exhibition "Tabir 78" and a se tenant sheet of 15 different stamps for Memorial Day 1978. The first two issues just referred to will be discussed in subsequent articles.

The Memorial Day stamps were printed by E. Lewin-Epstein Ltd by photolithography with tabs inscribed with the memorial insignia. They depict the unique Memorial Wall in the Yad-Lebanim Museum, Petah Tikva. This wall is composed of floral paintings done by school children in memory of soldiers who fell in the country's defence.

The Philatelic Services explain that the theme of the mural is the outcome of this museum's search for a way of perpetuating the memory of the fallen by giving expression to the thoughts passing through the minds of Israel youth confronted with bereavement.

These brilliantly multicolored paintings show flowers in different compositions. A large part of this unique and beautiful mural is depicted over the complete post office sheet, with each of the 15 stamps looking slightly different from the others. This makes the issue one of the most exciting in many years. The last time this was done was in 1963 for Halbanon Hebrew Press issue. A complete sheet of 16 Halbanon stamps is now worth about $50.

Since the 1978 Memorial Day issue is most attractive in full sheets, and I have pointed out how popular the only other Israeli stamp issued in this particular type of format has become, I would recommend that collectors should obtain full sheets. The cost should not be prohibitive, as each stamp has the low denomination of IL. 1.50 (about 11 cents) and therefore, one should be able to obtain the complete sheet for approximately $2.50 (retail). It may be a worthwhile investment.

WEAPON OF THOUGHT CONTROL

book review

By BERNARD BASKIN

The War That Hitler Won
By Robert E. Herzstein
Longman Canada Ltd.
$19.50

The War That Hitler Won is about the enormously successful effort to transform German society into a unified fighting machine, invincible in victory, and prepared to endure privation and suffering in adversity and defeat.

The clever, pervasive and unrelenting propaganda appealed to the highest German values and perverted them; it catered to the lowest instincts of a bewildered population and built a successful campaign on ideological hatred.

Even when Germany was on the verge of defeat, the insistent propaganda — compounded almost equally of conjured demons and heroic idealism — was effective in mobilizing the nation.

As early as 1939, Joseph Goebbels and his 42 propaganda officers throughout the country began appealing to German sentiments with words, phrases and symbols of irresistable emotional appeal: "Heroism," "sacrifice," "capitalists," "Bolsheviks," "Frederick the Great," "Perfidious Albion," etc. Jews, of course, were blamed for everything. It is noteworthy that anti-Jewish propaganda reached its peak in 1944, when most Jews had already perished.

Herzstein, a professor of history who has written extensively about the Third Reich, spent eight years gathering material (much of it hitherto unpublished) for this remarkable book.

The author addresses himself to questions such as these: Who was Goebbels, and how did he achieve his power? How did the party-and-state propaganda apparatus function at various levels and through what structures and individuals did it operate?

How did Nazi propagandists use the mass media, particularly film and other visual media, such as posters and placards? What was the Nazi ethic of hatred and salvation, and how did it appear in the media? How did the German people react to this propaganda?

The film medium was perfect for the Nazi projection of national socialist ideas. Some of the most powerful films ever produced — viewed by untold millions — emerged from the hands of brilliant, but morally dead or emotionally cynical, craftsmen: Jud Suss, Ohm Kruger, Rite of Sacrifice and Kolberg.

At the end, the Nazi leaders were still drawing solace from their propaganda which justified the war and exalted their responsibility for it.

I'm not sure what lessons are to be drawn from this readable, well-documented, ground-breaking examination of evil. Perhaps, simply, that thought control through manipulation of the media is a weapon that must at all costs be kept out of the hands of the would-be fuhrers of tomorrow.

Israeli folk artist to sing at Seneca

Chava Alberstein

TORONTO —

Chava Alberstein, one of Israel's most celebrated singers, will appear Tuesday, May 23 at 8:30 p.m. at the Minkler Auditorium of Seneca College, Finch campus. The evening is sponsored by the Jewish Student Federation and Toronto Student Zionists.

The performer brings together a wide range of styles including: Yiddish folk, Israeli pop, American jazz and Paris cabaret, producing a unique blend of music.

In Israel, she is best known for her song, Loo Yehee, a translation of the Beatles' Let It Be with a different melody.

She is known to interact well with her audience. "I sing songs which allow me to look the audience straight in the eye," she says. "They have to say something I believe in — in a simple and direct way that can reach everyone."

Memorial concert

TORONTO —

In a special commemorative concert to honor the 35th anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto uprising, the Toronto Jewish Folk Choir will present the choral tone poem, Die Naye Hagadah (The New Exodus).

The event will take place Saturday, May 27, 8 p.m., at the Minkler Auditorium, Seneca College.

Die Naye Hagadah is a musical work composed by the late Max Helfman, in a setting of Itzik Fefer's immortal poem, Shotns fun Varshever Ghetto (Shades of the Warsaw Ghetto).

The text and music combine to relate the heroism and martyrdom of the ghetto fighters of 1943, who, with few arms, resisted the tanks and planes of the Nazi armies for more than 40 days.

The Toronto Jewish Folk Choir will be accompanied in this work by a 26-musician orchestra. In addition to the main work, the choir will also perform a suite of songs by poet-composer Mordecai Gebirtig, himself a victim of the Second World War.

Entitled Der Zinger fun Noit (Singer of Misfortune), the suite will feature soprano Wendy Cladman, and baritone Peter Mamerka. The concert will be rounded out with Yiddish, Israeli and Canadian songs.

Tickets are $3 and $4, and may be obtained by calling 789-5502 (days) or 630-7047 (evenings). They will also be available at the Minkler Auditorium on the night of the concert.

Nirkoda Israeli dancers will be one of groups at dance concert, May 23-24, at the Leah Posluns Theatre of the northern YM-YWHA. Address is 4588 Bathurst Street.

'Y' dancers in 20th year

TORONTO —

Imagine, you are sitting in the Leah Posluns Theatre surrounded by 443 excited people anticipating the opening of the YMHA School of Dance first senior students performance. Suddenly, the lights dim, the music begins, the curtain rises and there before your eyes are the results of 20 years of hard work.

During the last 20 years the YM-YWHA School of Dance has seen a steady transformation from a program offering students at all levels courses and upgrading in areas such as jazz, tap, classical ballet, modern and character dancing to a high calibre school offering career-oriented students a chance to work toward an apprenticeship that could potentially lead to a place in a dance troupe.

The performance of the senior students takes place May 23-24, at 8 p.m.

The success of the 'Y' School of Dance owes itself to three major elements: the foresight and leadership of Jacque Foesier, director of the school and his staff, the fine facilities and the school of Dance Artists in Residence Program.

The artists in residence are commissioned to aide the students through workshops, master classes and new choreography. Well-known Canadian choreographers such as Elena Zhuravleva, character dance; Francesca M. Highfield, principal and founder of the Del Sarto School of Ballet, London, Eng., now in its 30th year; Anne Wootten, dancer, singer, choreographer; Maxine Heppner choreographer, dancer, actress, and Foesier have been working with the 40 senior dance students in preparation for the 'Y's first senior dance students concert.

Carol Lazare pleads with Ken Parnell in James Reaney's play, "Wacousta".

Things are looking up for striking Carol Lazare film, stage actress

By JENIVA BERGER

TORONTO —

Being on the road isn't an invitation to adventure for most actors — it can, and has been, a totally enervating experience for many. Carol Lazare didn't feel that way working in the recent southern Ontario tour of James Reaney's Wacousta!

The fact that she played the part of an 18th century daughter of a wicked British army general, with her leg shackled to a log — punishment for fraternizing with an Indian — didn't faze her or even dampen her enjoyment of the constant charge of energy from playing to different audiences.

How energetic can you be shackled to a log? Lazare comes across as an honest off-the-cuff, no-nonsense person, not at all the type to feed the media what they think they should hear. She believed whole-heartedly in Reaney's material for Wacousta! even if the Toronto critics didn't share her opinion.

She draws a sharp line between Reaney's historical drama ("the material is full and rich — it's all there") and other Canadian plays that lean too heavily on the actor's resources.

"In a lot of Canadian plays," she says, "the actors rework the show in rehearsal. You're panicked because you have to have a finished product in four weeks! In Toronto, it's always the case. It's the actor's dilemma to make the play work. Every actor has to believe in the play, but it's frustrating!"

Lazare has acted in a fair share of small theatre productions here in Toronto, but she doesn't at all appear frustrated. She's tall, slender and cool. Not glamorous, she has a striking, nearly perfect camera face, and film work is what she prefers above all else.

Remember her as Edna the Hooker in Lies My Father Told Me? There was something in her performance that lingered in the memory, an electricity on the celluloid that doesn't happen in the same way on stage.

"The theatre takes so much of your time," she says. "You wake up in the morning and the memory of the show is still in your mind. In film, you're encapsulated for a certain number of weeks and that's it.

"It's an amazing experience," she says of the medium. "All that counts is you and the camera at that moment."

Lazare fell into films quickly by sheer luck. She had come to Toronto in 1971 after finishing 2½ years at the University of Alberta and a time grappling with her own feelings about being an actress.

She didn't have to wonder for too long. "I literally walked off the street into a feature role in The Megantic," she recalls. "It was the first feature film that the CBC did. If that would have happened in the States, my career would have been a few notches higher."

The daughter of a Canadian army draftsman, ("quite an experience for a Jewish man") and a legal secretary, Lazare's sister is photographer, Eleanor Lazare. She grew up in London, Ont., where she got her first taste of theatre in Cinderella at the London Little Theatre.

She feels strongly about Western sensibility as far as theatre is concerned, and she considers Alberta and Vancouver "alive" as compared to the depressing Toronto scene.

"No one is coming out," she interjects. "Is it the material? I don't know." But, she adds, "there is a more direct relationship between people who run theatres there and their audiences. They're not elitist. They do produce more American plays, but the writing is better."

While Lazare is considering a move to Los Angeles, she doesn't consider herself quite ready for it yet. Like most actors, after the present job, she'll be unemployed. But her track record in theatre, films, and radio has been surprisingly good for an artist who doesn't really like to push.

"I was adding up my T-4 forms the other day," she says happily, "and I think things are looking up."

Unpretentious 'Oifn Fidl' is admirably executed

music

By RICK KARDONNE

The first capacity audience which I have seen to date in the Leah Posluns Theatre turned out to see the Jewish Public Library presentation of Nathan Garnick's production of Sholom Aleichem's Oifn Fidl. And little wonder that the audience response was so deservedly warm, for this unpretentious yet vitally humanistic evening was well-performed and admirably empathetic.

Granted, this dramatized version was not exactly faithful to the original story. In fact, the discrepancy, from a purely literary viewpoint, was fairly major. In the original story, the father scolded the son not for playing his violin on Shabbat. But, in the total context of the evening's entertainment, the presentation was so successful that this academic inaccuracy, while it should be mentioned here, was ultimately irrelevant.

The guiding light was, of course, Nathan Garnick, and his emphatic narration is what gave the entire dramatized cantata a sense of life. Always talking to the audience as though he was one of us, his expressive raconteur style, sometimes in English, sometimes in Yiddish, emphasized every single nuance. The general feeling was one of warm delight and sympathy.

The eight Heritage Singers and Players, accompanied by pianist Edith Narvey, succeeded in infusing a gentle sense of comic pathos into the normally static stand-up choral vehicle approach. The strongest singers were bass Harvey Narrol and alto Ella Himel, she being outstanding in her lead part in Vladimir Heifetz' Shir HaShirim. Nate Greenberg's brief comic reflections formed a good counterpoint to Harvey Narrol's august dignity.

Violinist Yaakov Geringas performed four selections, as the fiddler. The most interesting solo selection (in Shir HaShirim he, in effect, was supporting Ms. Himel) was Maurice Ravel's Kaddish, a beautiful fusion of impressionistic sublimity and the most mature Jewish liturgical spirit. Ravel, of course, was one of the greatest composers of all time; his positive sense of his Jewishness as reflected in compositions such as this has been unfortunately neglected, and I'm glad that Yaakov Geringas had the intelligence to mention this key facet.

Heifetz's original music was very good; complete in the most fluid Yiddish folk mainstream while subtly incorporating liturgical elements when appropriate.

Certainly, there is a great audience for Yiddish theatre in Toronto, and by all means this should be encouraged, with the Leah Posluns Theatre being centre stage for what I believe should be far more Yiddish theatrical activity.

The fact that the admission tab was a reasonable $2 was almost sensible. It confirms my belief that an important reason for the hitherto sparse audiences at many other recent Posluns Theatre events has been the unreasonably high $6 (on average) admission prices.

On Sunday, May 21, the Metzritcher Landsmanshaft is having a 50th celebration from 7 to 5 at the Borochov Centre, 272 Codsell.

Fifty years ago a group of about 40 orphans arrived in Georgetown, Ont. Two years later, another group followed and on the 21st many of these individuals will be gathering for what will certainly be an emotional reunion.

Ben Kayfetz, executive director Canadian Jewish Congress, Central Region, will be featured as guest speaker. Visiting members of the landsmanshaft from Los Angeles, Detroit, New York and Cleveland will also address the gathering.

Launches drive

TORONTO —
Sol D. Granek, director-general of the United Israel Appeal of Canada's office in Jerusalem, recently launched the 1978 UIA campaign in Stratford and then addressed the Jewish community of Owen Sound.

In his first address, Granek outlined the contemporary Middle East situation and stressed the importance of support for Israel in the Diaspora. Accompanying him on this trip was Michael Marcus, assistant-director UIA, Ontario Region. Maurice Helperin presided at the meeting.

In Owen Sound, Granek participated in a Holocaust memorial ceremony at Beth Ezekiel Synagogue. He was accompanied by Ben Ocopnick, executive director UIA, Ontario region.

Mike Rabovsky, co-chairman of the UIA campaign presided at the meeting and was awarded a special certificate of merit from the president of Israel in recognition of his dedication to the campaign.

Gifts to both campaigns indicated an increase over previous years with Owen Sound realizing an increase of 35%, the highest level ever recorded in the community.
